I. Common balance: An instrument for determining the relative weights ar masses of bodies. It consists of a beam with its fulcrum In the middte, and ita arms precisely equal From the extremities of the arms are sas pended twe scales, the one to receive the object to bs weighed, and the other the conaterpoise. The fulcrum consists of a steel prlsm, called the lnife-edge, which passes through the beam, and reats, with ita sharp adge or sxis of suspension, upon twe supports of agate or polisher steel. A needle or peinter is fixed to the beam, snd oseiliates peinter is fixed to the beam, and oseiliates with it in front of a graduated arc. It points to zero when the balance is at rest. When the beam is horizeatal, the centre of gravity of the instrumeat ahould be in the same vertical line with the edge of the fulcrum, but a little beuesth the latter. A good balance possesses beth sensibility and stability. A balance ia said to be aensible which so easily revolves upen its fulcrum that, when in equipoise, the addition of the minutest partlcle of matter to one acale makes it seasibly move. lt is stable when, owing to the low positiou of the ceatre of gravity, it does not long oscillate on being disturbed. This first type of balance may be modiffed in varieus ways.
(a) A fulse balance of this type is one in which the arms are nnequal in leugth, the longer one being on the side of the scale inte which the'article to be weighed is to be put. Ws the balauce is really a lcver [Lever], it is Asident that a smaller weight than that in the scale will put the beam into equilibrium. The fraud may at once be detected by putting the article to be weighed in to the scale containing the weight, and vice versa.
(b) Hydrostatic balance: A balance designed fer the weighing of bodies in water, with the view of sscertaining their specific gravity.
3. A "Roman" balance, the same as the steelyant. [STEELYARD.] Of this type the Chiacse, the Danish or Swcdish, and the beut lever balances arc medifications.
II. Mechanics and Netural Philosophy:

Balance of Torsion: An instrument invented by Conlomb for compariog the intensities of very small forcea. It consists of a metallic wire suspeaded vertically from a fixed point, to the lower ead of which a horizoatal ncedle is attached with a small weight designed to keep the wire atretched. The magnitude of a small force acting on the end of the needle is measured hy thic ameunt of "torsion," or twisting of the wire-in other words, by the are which the needle passes over measared from the peint of repose.

VII Politics. Balance of Power: Such a condition of things that the pewer of any one state, however great, is bslanced by that of the rest. To maintain such an equilibrinn all the nations jeslously watch each other, and if sny powerful snd smbitious one seek to aggrandize itself at the expedse of a weaker neighbor, all the other states, partiea to the system, hold themselves bound to resist its aggressions. The aocient Greek states thus combined frst against Athenian and then agsinst Spartan domination. Several of the moderu European states did so yet more syatemstically, first against Spain, then against France, and more recently against Russia Many of theae wars have tended to the viadi cation of internstional law and the preserva tion and increase of human liberty; but ethers have been detrimental to humsoity and the "balance of power" does net now override every consideration to the extent that it did formerly. Those whe advocate it have no other armbition than to maintain the "atatus quo," however arbitrary or obaolete. They are logicaliy bound to coudemn aolete resurrection of Italy, the unlfication of Germany, the destruction of the Pope's temGermany, the destructiou of the Pope's temparal power, and the curtailment of Turkey-

Dramatic Art: A dramatic representation, consisting of daneing and pantomime, regulated by the atrains of music, and gencrally attended by tha suberdinate accessoriea of scenery and decoration. It was first introdiseed by the Greeks, was conied and developed by by the Greeks, was copied and developed by the Romans, and was revived in more modern times by the Italiana, whose example diffused it over most civilised countries. Our own nation received it from the French. Till the decline of the Ronan empire, the performers were men, then women were introduced, and hava aince been the chief actors in the ballet. The bad taste of the play-going public has always tended to drag down the ballet to the low level of a mere exhibition of gymnastic skill in dancing, whereas its original and specific aim was to act by gesture instead of words a drama illustrativa of the life, mawers, and costumes of fereign nations.

1I. Subsequertly

1. Gen.: Anything large and spherical, or nearly so, especially if at the same time it is hollow. [B.
2. Spec.: The machine for aerrial navigation described under B. 4
B. Technically

- 1. Old Chem.: A large spherlcal receiver with a short neck, used in distillation.

2. Arch.: A ball or globe placed on the top of a pillar. (Johnson.)
3. Pyrotech.: A ball of pasteboard, stuffed with combustible matter, which, when fired, mounts to a coDsiderable height in the air, and then bursta into bright aparks of fire reand then bursta into bright aembling stara. (Johnson.)
4. Acronautics: A machine deaigned for aërial navigation. The sight of soap-bubbles rieing into the air, and of the flight of birds, must have made men in all ages give at least an occasional stray thought to the sulject of aerrial navigation; but the first deliberately considered scheme recorded seems to have been that of Francis Lann, a Jesuit, who, in 1670, proposed to raise a vessel into the atmosphere by means of four metallic globes, having a vacuum inside. The acheme, if tried, would have failed; the globes of metal, if intenaely thin, would have been crushed in a moment by the surrounding air ; whilst if moment thick enough to resist the pressure, made thick enough to resist the pressure, The only type of balloon which as yet las succeeded was invented early in 1772 , by the brothers Stephen and Joseph Montgolier, paper-makers of Annonay, near Lyons, who publicly exhibited at Annonay the first balloon ascent ever witnessed, on June 5, 1783. Their balloon was filled with air rarefed by a fire lighted in the car. In December of the same year, M. Charles, Professor of Physics in Paria, aubstituted hydrogen gas for rsrefied atmospheric air. On November 21, 1783, the Marquis d'Arlandea and M. Pilatre ascended 3,000 feet or more in a balloon, and, passing over Paria, descended again in safety. Since then many daring aëronautic feats have been then many daring aeronalutic feats have been anceessfully achievcd, whilc aome fatal accidents have occurred. M. Blanchard, ascenddents have occurred. M. Blanchard, ascending from Paris on March 2, 1784, was the first ing from Paris on March 2, 1784, was the first to carry up with him a parachnte to aid him in his descent if a eatastrophe occurred. On Novernber 25, 1783, the first English balloon was sent up from London, with no person in the car; on September 15, 1784, Vincentio Lunardi ascended from London; on January 7 , $1785, \mathrm{M}$. Blanchard and Dr. Jeffries crossed the English Channel from Dover to the forest of Gniennes; un September 21, 1802, M. Garnerin safely descenced in London from a parachute. Twice in 1804 M . Gay-Lussac ascended from Paria for meteorological and other acientific research, the first time, accompanied by $M$ Biot, 13,000 feet; the second time, alone 23,000 feet. It will be olscerved that in the early history of balloons France takes undiaputcd precedence of England. At a later period, however, England gained a triumph not yet paralleled on the Continent or elsewhere, Mr. Glaisher, a celebrated aëronant, having ascended from Wolverhampton, on September 5, 1862, to the amazing altitude of 37,000 feet. This was one of twenty-eight ascents he made for scientific purposcs, uncer the anspices of the British Asrociation, between July 17th, 1862, and May 26th, 1866. America has had a number of daring acero nants, some of whom have mada hundreds of ascents.

A great drawback on the utility and aafety of aërial travelling is the inability, in the present state of scieuce, effectively to guide the machine in the air
A balloon of modern type is made of long bands of silk gewed together, and renderet air-tight by being covered with canutchonc varnish. It is filed with hydrogen or coal gas. At the top there is a safcty-valve, under the aëronaut'a control. He sits in a light wicker-work boat or car, suspended by means of corde from a network covering the ballonn. A balloon abont forty-eight feet long by thirty aix feet broad and thick will carry theed persons ; with its car and băl'-1ott, s. [Fr. ballot $=$ a bailot, a voting-ball, a panajer, a basket; Sp. balota; Port, balote; Ital. ballotta $=$ a little ball, dimin. of balla $=$ a ball.]

3. A bali used for the purpose of voting. In casting a ball for or against an individual, the arrangement sometimes is that if the vote be designed in his favour, then a white ball ia uaed; but if it be intended to be against him, then one of a black colour is employed -whence the phrase "to blackball one." Other methods, however, may be adopted thus, a ball of any colour put through a bola into one drawer may indicate a favoureble vots, and into another an unfavourable one. Used in thia sense, lit., for such a ball as that described, or fig., for anything, even though not a ball, employed in secret voting.
4. The method of yoting in a secret manner, by meana of balls of different colonrs, or put into different compartments, or in any other way; secret as opposed to open voting. Admiasion into acientific societies, clubs, the direction of banks and other large commercial estation of banks and ot been conducted by ballot. In ancient Athens and the other Greek states it was in use wben votes had to be taken on political questions. It has long been eatablished in Ameriea, and for a shorter pariod in France. In Great Britain it constio tuted one of the five points in the Chartist in the state being at first opposed to it, as deeming it a revolutionary project. Grsdually, however, the mass of the Liberal party ceased to fear the ballot, and oppoaition to it on the part of the Conaervatives became less pronounced, till at last, while Mr. Gladstona was in the plenitude of his power, a bill, legalising it as an experinent for elght years, was passed during the cession of 1872 . Its was passed during the session of 1872 . Its merits are that it constitutes a considerabls bribery, and thms encourages the voter to express hia real sentiments, beaides making elections much less likely to result in riot than when the old system prevailed. Within recent years a apccially secret syatem of voting has been devised in Auatralia, and adopted in asveral other countries, Dotably in many of the日everal other countries, Dotably in thany orpose gtates of the American Union. The purpor of this is to prevent intimidation of the voter, by enabling him to keep tha characte of hio vota strictly secret, m result which was not achieved under the old system of the so-called Beeret ballot.

bạ-na'-na., s. & a. [Jn Sw. bananastrdid; Fr. banane, the fruit, and bananier, the tree; SP. banana, banano, bananas; Port. banana.]
A. As substantive:
4. A tree, the Musa sapientum of botanists. To the superficial observer it looks like a palm, but the leaves are essentially different. Tearing in long stripes, like those of endogens in general, they differ from the normal type in doing so transversely on either side from the midrih, instead of longitudinally. The flowers also are different, and the nearest affinity of the order Musaceex, of which it or its congener, the plantain, is the type, is with the gingers and arrowroots, and not with the palma. The banana is abont twenty feet high. It resembles the plantain so closely that some think it a mere variety of that species; but it differs in having the stalk marked with darkpurple stripes and spots, and possessing a shorter, nore rounded, and more luscions fruit. Originally from the Eastern hemisphere, but now cultivated also in the tropics of America

5. The fruit of the banana-tree. It growa in cluaters of long, angular, finger-like fruits, some inches in length. When the rind, which easily comes away, is atripped nff, there is found beneath it a soft pulp like that of a fine pear, but more luscions.

or the irohibition of acrese to some place erile aiguifies the removal from one's home to exile, therefore, is to banish, but to banish is not alwaya to exile. Banishment foltows fron a decree of justice; exile either by the necessity of circumstances of an order of su tharity. Banishment is a disgraceful punish ment inflicted by tribunala upon delinquents exile is a disgrace incurred without dishonour exile removes us from our country; banish ment drives us from it ignominiously. Banishment is a compulsory exercisa of power which musi be submitted to: exile is a state into which we may go voluntarily
(b) The following is the distinction between to barish and to expel:-Barishment and ex pulsion both mark a diggraceful and coerciv exclnsion, but banishment is authoritative ; it ia a public act of government : expulsion is simply coerciva; it is the act of a private individnal, or a amall community. Banishmen always supposes a removal to a distant spot to another land; expulsion never reaches beyond a particular loouse or society-e.g., a university or public schoel, &c. Bonishment and expulsion are likewise used in a fignrative and expulsion are likewise used in a fignrative gense, althongh exile is not: in this aense, banishment inarks a distant and entire re-

The goldsmiths combined with their more specifle svocation, first the exchange of coims, next the borrowing and lending of money, and finally banking of the more modern type came gradually into existence sbont the middle of the seventeenth eentary.

Ths object of all bankers is to trade in moacy. This may be done with capitsl which in the strictest sense, is their own; or it may be so that, while employing this, they may invite deposits and eurrent aecounts from the publie, thus keeping money in safe custody, of whieh the owner might be robbed if he retained it in his own possession, snd making payments for him nore safely and conveniently than he conld do himself. [See Deposit, Cunaent Account.] The last-inentioned operation is generally carried ont by means of bills or cheques. [Bille, Cheque, described are banks of deposit and of discount. To these functions some sdd that of being banks of issue, i.e., a bank which issues notee [BANK-NOTE, lSSUE.]
The banks of the British Isles may be otherwise elassified :-
(a) The Bank of England stsnds in a cate gory by itself, It is ruled by a Governor, its oriminal capitat and twenty-four directors Its original capital of $£ 1,200,000$ was increased reached $£ 14,553,000$. lts charter has frequently reached $£ 14,553,000$. ts charter has frequently been renewed. it is, of course, a bank of issue. The £5 notes, by which it is best known to the general puhlic, wers first sent forth in the general public, wers first sent forth in sud has helped the Government in return. Though generally prosperous, it has had its vieissitudes, having had to auspend payment of its notes in 1696, and between 1797 and 1820 was restricted from making payments in gold though a flrst step towards the gradual re sumption of the normal system had been made in 1817. The Aet by which banking is now regulated is Sir R. Peel's celebrated Bank Aet of 1844, cne provision of which was that the issuss of the Bank of England on securities ahould be limited to $£ 14,000,000$. The periodical settlement of divideads snd ammities, contrscted for at the National Deht offics in Old Jewry, is made at the Bank of Eng land. The directors of the Bank meet every Thursday, to consider and fix the rate of dia count, and for other business. Till lately other banks and discount houses ware wont to modify their own rate of interest by these periodical announcamsnts, but of Iste eome of them bave acted more indspendentiy.
(b) The Jointastock Banks of London and the provincial parts of England. The capital of joint-stock bank is mads up of the money sub scribed by its shareholders. Most of these establishments are constituted on the prin cipls of unlimited lishility, by which ia neant that if ths hank become insolvent, the ahare holders ars responsibls to the last farthing thsy have in the world for the debts of the bank: sharing its profits io time of prosperity they must participate in its losses in days of adversity. Nay more, a trustes who holds bank shares is responsibls personslly to the sxtent of his privsts property, though he could not without frsud have appropriated any profits arising from the shares placed in his pame. By an Act of Parliament passed in 1879, these will be permitted on certain conditions to diminish the excessivs liability of ditions to diminish the excessivs liability of their shareholders. Most of ths joint-stock banks grant interest on the deposits. Nons within sixty-five miles of London are allowed to be banks of issue.
(c) Private Banks: Associations of private persons for banking purposes, not incorporated under Act of Parliament. These, as a rule, give no interest on deposits.
(d) Uniled States: Banking has passed through a series of conditions. Before the Civil War, each atats had ite owa banking syatem, the banks being banke of issue, and their notes often very poorly seeured, with the result of grest loss and distress in every period of financial depression. During the war the present National Banking Syetem was inpresent National Banking syetem was inon the security of Gevernment bonds, purchased on the security of Geverament bonds, purchased hy the banks, and deposited in the United States Treasury. This system makes note States Treassry. This system makes note

2. Theol, Church Hist., & Ord. Lang.: A Christian who holds that it is not aceording to Scripture to baptize jnfants, but that the ordinance of baptism should be administered only to believers in Christ, and in their cass not by sprinkling, or affusion, but by immersion.
Whether the early Church did or did not baptize infants has been, and still is, a matter of dispute. It is universally admitted that some of the so-ealled heretical sects of the Middle Ages were opposed to infant baptism. at the time of the leformation the question to whom laptism shonkl be adninistered came very prominently before the Chureh and the world, owing to the fact that a considerabls mumber of those who, under the leadership of Luther, Melanehthon, and ather religious chiefs, cast off their allegiance to Rome, ultimatcly abandoned all belief in infant laptism. Their opponents called them Anabaptista, implying that they administered a second bapism, the first one, that dispensed in infancy, still remaining in force; whilst they, of eourse, repudiated this oame, alleging that the first baptism given in infancy being invalid, that whieh they dispensed in adult life was that whieh they dispensed i.
the first, and not the second.
Baptist views first attracted attention in Engand in 1535 f, and the earliest congre zation wa formed there in 1611. The first Baptist in the United states was lioger Willizons, who seceded from the l'uritan communities of New Eogland, was baptized by immersion in Providence in 1639 , and mited with others to found there the first Baptist Chureh in America. He was one of the earlicest of mea to anoounce the principle of religious liberty, and to give utterance to the Baptist duetrine that no one shonld be bound to assist in maiotaining worship against his own ronsent. Two years afterwards anotier emsaent Baptist, Johu Clark, fonnded the colony of lRiodo Island Clark, fonnded the colony of Rhode lsaod chureh was founded in Dover, New Hampshire, abont the same time, while the first in Massachusetts was fonnded at Swansey, in 1663. The growth of the sect in thls conntry was very moderate during the celonisi period, not more than 77 Baptist churches beirge known to exist in America in 1770. Atter the Revelution it grow with considerable rapidity, the civil disabilities under which its members had labored being now removed. In 1784 there were 471 churches and 35,101 members. By 1812 these had increased to 2164 churches and 172,972 members. It was not until 1802 that the Massachusetts Missionary Soclety, the first Baptiat missionary aciety in thia country so far as is known, was formed, though missionsry efforts had been previously made. Elder John Leland, born in Massachusetta in 1754, travelied during hia missionary tours 75,000 miles and baptized more than 1500 converts. Since the dates given the Baptiat Church ha had a very active growth in thia country, the number of its members now exceeding thone of .any other religiout denomination. In 1893 it possensed In the United Statea 36,793 churchea and $3,383,160$ members, its church and college property being valued at more than $$ 100,000,000$. There are lese than 500,000 Baptista in the remainder of the world.

The American Baptists are in favor of a eomplete eeparstion of Church and State, and have alwaye proteated againgt atate support of religion and the infiction of paina and penalties on religious grounds. They were for a long time almost alone in these views, but are low joined in them by all americam Proteo tants. They hold that baptism, according to the Scripture teachings, means immersion, and hold that none but thone who have been thua baptized are qualified to partaka of the Lord'a Supper. The American Baptist Missionary Union grew out of a preliminary organization founded in 1814. During the eighty years of ita existedce it has sent out more than 500 missionariea, who have baptized nearly 200,000 converts. The American Baptist Home Mission Society was founded in 1832, has gent out about 1000 misaionaries and teachers, and has done excellent work among the Southern freedmen.

1. Originally: A poet by profession, apecially one whose calling it was to celelirate in verse, aong, and play the exploits of the chiefs or others who patronised him, or those of contemporary heroes in general. Bards of this character fiourished from the earliest period among the Greeks, and to a lesser extent among among the Greeks, and to a lesser extent among first century B.C., allude to them under the first century B.C., alude to them under the name of $\beta$ aipoo (bardoi), and Lucan, in the first name of $\beta$ apoo (bardoi), and Lucan, in the first century A.D., under that of bardi. Tacitua aeems to hint at their existence among the Germanic tribes. It was, however, above all, among the Gauls and other Celtic nationa that they flourished ioost.

According to Warton, they were originally a conatitutional appendage of the Druid hierarchy. At Llanidan, in Anglesea, formerly inhabited by Druidical conventual societies, veatlges exist of Tre'r Dryn = the Arch-Druid'a mansion ; Bodrudau = tha abode of the inforior Druids ; and near them Bod-owyr = the abode of the Orades, i.e., of those passing through their novitlate; and Tre'v Beirdd = the hamiet of the bards.
They may be even conaidered as essential constituents of the hierarchy, if tha division of it into priests, philosophers, and poets be accurate. The bards did not pass away with the Druids, but flourished, especially in Wales, honoured at the courts of princes, and figuring up to the present dsy at the Eisteddfods or gatherings of bards and ininatrels. They were aimilarly bonoured throughout lreland, and indeed among the Ceits everywhere.

T (a) Crabb thus distinguishes the adjectives bare, naked, and uncovered:-"Bare marks the condition of being without some neceasary appendage; naked simply the absence of ex ternal covering; bare is therefore often aubstituted for naked, yet not vice veral-e.g., bare-headed or bare-footed; but a figure or the body ia naked. Applied to otber objecta, bare iodicates want in general ; raked simply something external, wanting to the eye-e.g., bare walls, a bare hoase; naked felds, a saked appearance: bare in this aense is often followed by the object wanted; naked ia mostly einployed as an adjunct-bare of leavea, a nalied tree. Naked and uncovered strongly resemble each other; to be nalied is in fact to have the body uncovered, but many things uncovered are not noked. Nothing is aiaid to be nated but what in the nature of things, or according to the usages of men, ought to be covered."
(b) Bare, scanty, and destitute are thus discriminated :-" All thesa terms denote the abaence or deprivation of some necessary. Bare and scanty have a relative aense, the ratter respects what servea for ourselves, the latter what is provided by others: a supply is scanty. Bare is said of those things which belong to corporeal sustenance: destitute of one's outward circunstances in destitute of one's outward circundstances in general : bare of clothe

Chem.: A dyad metallic element; symb. Ba; atomic welght, 137 . Barium is prepared by the decomposition of barium chloride, $\mathrm{BaCl}_{2}$, by the electric current, or by tha vapour of potassium. It is a white malleable metal, which melts at red heat, decomposes water, and oxidiaea in the air. Barium occurs in nature as barium carbonate and sulphate. Its salts are prepared by dissolving the carbonate in acids, or by roasting the native sulphate of barium with one-third of its weight of coal, which cooverta it into barium sLphide, BaS this is decomposed by hydrochloric or nitric warium is required. All soluble aalts of barium ars very poisonous; tha best antidotes an alkaline sulphatea. The salts of barium ara employed as reagents in the laboratory, and It the manufacture of fireworks to produce a green light. Barium is precipitated as a carbonate, $\mathrm{BaCO}_{3}$, along with carbonates of stroatium and calcium, by ammonla carbonate. [See Analysis.] Barium can be separated by dissolving the carbonatea in acetic acid, and adding potassium chromate, which gives a yellow precipitate of the inaoluble barium chromate. Barium solts give an itamediate white precipitate on the addition of calcium sulphate, an insoluble precipitate with $4 \mathrm{HF}_{\mathrm{S}} \mathrm{SiF}_{4}$ (hydrofinosilicic acid), and a white precipitate insoluble in acids with sulphuric acid or with soluble suiphates; this precipitate is not hlackened by $\mathrm{II}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$. Barium chloride gives a green colour to the flame of alcohol, and the spectrum of harium salts contains a nuinber of charscteristic greea lines.

barium carbonate.

1. Chem.: A heavy white powder obtained by precipitating barium chloride or nitrats with an alkaline carbonate. It is nearly insoluble in water. Formula, $\mathrm{BaCO}_{3}$.
2. Min.: A mineral, called also Witherlte (q.v.).
barium chloride, $\mathrm{BaCl}_{2}$. A colnurless transpareat selt, crystallising with two molecules of water in flat four-sided tables. A cules of water in flat four-sided tables. A tains 78 parts of the salt dissolved in 100 parts of water.
barium dioxide, $\mathrm{BaO}_{2}$, is obtained by gently heating baryta in a current of oxygea gas. It is a grey lowder, which when heated to a higher temperature gives off oxygeu gas, and is re-converted into baryta barley-break, barley-brake, barlibreak, barli-breake, barly-break, barly-breake (O. Eng.), ba

I. In England: A game once common in Eagland, as shown by the frequency with which it was alluded to by the old poets, but which is now coafined chiefly to Cumberlaud, where it is denominated Burley-brigs. It was played by six young people, three of either sex, formed into couples, a young man and a young woman in each, it being decided by lot which individuals wera to be paired together. A piece of ground was then divided into three apaces, of which the central one was profanely termed "Hell." This was assigned to a couple as their appropriate place. The couples who occnpied the other apaces then advanced as near as they dared to the central one to tempt tbe doomed pair, who, with one of their hands locked in that of their partner, endeavoured With the other to grasp them and draw them into the central space. If they sacceeded, then they were allowed themselves to ennerge from it, the couple caught taking their places. That the game might not be too speedily finiahed, leave was given to the couple in danger of being taken to break hands and in dividually try to escape, while no such liberty was accorded to those attempting to acize them. Though the name does not occur in the aubjoined lines, the game which they describe is that of barley-break.

Among opticians:

1. Originally: A modification of the objectglass of a teleacope, suggested by Mr. Peter Barlow, with the idea of avolding the use of fint glass in the construction of objectglasses of large aize; discs of flint glass suit able for optical purposes then belng both expensive and rare. He proposed to enclosa between two convax lenses a fluid lens equal in refractive power to a alint glass of the same dimensions. This proposal was not generally adopted, and the term "Barlow lens" is now mostly applied to the form of lens described mostiy applied

2. Now: A concave lens Inserted in the eyepiece of a telescope before the raya come to a piece of a telescope before the rays come to a the object-glass or apeculum is increased nearly one-balf, and the effect ia the same as if the tube were proportionally leogthened, the magnifyiog power being considerably"increased. Another advantage of the Barlow lens is the avoidance of the loss of light which would take place if the ame magnifying power were produced by using an eye-glass of aborter focus.

of the scale, unattainsble by the ordinary cistern barometer, can be produced by this one; besides whlch the instrument is more portable. Gsy-Lussac.s barometer is in the form of a siphon. It has two scales with a common zero polnt, and graduated in contrary directions. As the one branch, the shorter oae, corresponds to the cistern, and the other or longer one to the tube, the differenca between the two levels is the true height of the mercury. Bunter's barometer is a alight but valusble modification on that of Gay-Lussac. For the aneroid barometer (thst "withont moisture ") see Aneroid. The general mean at the level of the sea is 29.96 inches. A bsrometer is popnlarly termed a weather-glass. In order to adapt it for this purpose Hooke devised whst in called the whel-barometer. It is a syphon barometer, having in its shorter log a float, a string from which passes over a pulley, and is connected with a weight eomeWhat lighter than the float. To the palley is affixed a needle, which mover mound a circle graduated to represent the different variations In the weather. [Weather-alass.] Speaking broadly, a barometer rises for good and falls for bad weather, but there are exceptions to this rule. The more accurate statement is that with S. W., S.E., sad W. winds the mercory falls for rain. If It do so rapidly, the cury falls for rain. If It do so rapidly, the probabllity ia that a heavy atorm is spprosehing; if stowly, continned bad westher is to weather; if gradually, for fine settled weather. A rise, with wind veeriag N.E., may be indicative of rain.

II. History & Law :

1. Formerly:
(1) At first spparently every lond of a manor, of whlch sense the expression court baron is etill a memorial. [Court-Baron.] The Magns Charta granted in King John's time seems to show that originally all lords of manors, who held of the king in capite, had geats in the Great Council or Parllament; but their numbers becoming too large for proper deliberstion, the king aummoned only the greater barons in person, leaving it to the sheriff to convene the smaller ones to another house, which was a very important step in making the separation which st present exists between the Honses of Lords and Commona. (Blachistone, bk. i., ch. 3.) [BARONY.]
Hence * (2) the term baron came to be confined to the lords of manore summoned by the royal writ in plsca of by the sheriff. The writ ran "Hac vica tantum." (Blackstone: Ibid.)
Barons by ancient senure were those who held certain lands or territories from the king, who, however, still reserved the tenure in chief to hímself.
Barons by temporal tenure were those who held their honours, castles, and manora as heads of their barony, that is, by grand aerjeantry. By their tenure they were sammoned to Parliament; now they are not moned to Yarliament; now there till a writ is issued in their favolur.
(3) Richard II. made the term baron a mere title of honour, by conferring it on vsrious persons by letters pateat. (Blachstone, bk. i., ch. 3.)
The first baron by patent was John Beallchamp of Holt, who was raised to the peerage by Richard II., in the eleventh year of his reign, October 10,1387 , by the title of Baron of Kidderminster. No other instance occura until 10 Henry Vi.
2. Now:
(1) Any noblemsn belonging to the lowest onder of the peerage-that inmediately beneath the rank of viscount. His atyle is "The IRight Hon. Lord - -", snd he is addressed as "My Lord." In general, in plsee of being called "Baron, he is aimply termed "Lord A." or "B." Il is coronet has six large pearls aet at equal distances on the charlet. His coronation robes ar

1. Baronets of Great Britain: A tiilled order, the loweat that is hereditary. Speaking broadly, they rank in precedence next after the nobility, or, more specifically, next after the yonnger sens of viscounts and barons; bat in reality they are iaferior to the Knighte of the Order of St. George or of the Girter, certain official dignitaries, and knights-bannerets created on the actual field of battle. The order was institnted by Jsmes I., on May 22 nd, 1611 , to raise money by fees paid for the dignity, and thus obtaln resources for the settlement of Ulster. The number was to be limited to 200 ; but s device for increasing an honour so prefitable to the Treasury was soud found, so that before the death of Charles I. 458 pstents for the crestion of baronets had been issned; and by the end of 1878 there were 698 bareaets in existence. The dignity is generally cenfined to the heirs msle of the graatee. The bsdge of a baronet is sinister, a hand gules ( $=$ a bloody hazd) in a field argent. Etiquette requires that he be ad

3. Baronets of Scotland: A titled order planned by James I., but aetually instituted, net by him, but by Charles I. in 1625 , just after the aceession of the latter menarch to the throne. The object aimed at in the crestion of the order was the planting of Nova Scotis (New Scotland). Each baronet by his patent received eighteen square miles of territory in that colony, with a sea-coast bounding it oa one side; or a tract of land extending stretching for six miles inland. Since the union betwetu England and Scotland in 1707. no baronets have been created holding razk in the latter country alone, hut seme titles existing previously still figure in the British waronetage.

"He [Bishop Hall] lived to gee hifg catbedral converted into a, barrack, nud kis palace into uiu ale house."-T. Marton: Hist, of Eag. Poet, iv, - As a writer in the Perny Cyclop. shows, the word barrack does not occur in our older dictionaries, though it is found in Philiips's World of Words, fol (1706). In 1720 in effort was made to erect barracks in London, under the false gretcnce that they wonld be used as hespitals for those who might be seized by the plaguc, which, though extinct in England, was then raging at Marscilles. The device was, however, seen through, and had to be abandoued. The first permanent harracks were erected just before 1739; but even as late as the French revolutionary war, opposition was made to their being built on an extensive scale, their existence being considered dangerous to civil liberty. At length the perilous character of the contest with France made it sbsolutely essential that barracks should at once be ereeted in various places, and in 1792 the work was undertaken in carnest. By the end of 1819 more than three millions of pounds bad heen expended in carrying it out.
Shortly after the Revolution of 1688 more vehement resistance than that given to the erection of harracks had been offered to the retention of a standing army. [AFMr.] The fidelity of the Britislı soldiers, 80 markedly contrasting with the frequent disloyalty of the modern Spanish troops or of the old Roman pratorian guarde, has long alnce procured universal tolerance in England both of a standing army and of barracks for its secommodation.
Thia feellog about barracka never extended to the United States, and our soldiera have elways been well housed, with excellent provieions for comfort and accommodation

No one who has not been called to the bar can plead in the Snperior Courts at Westminster, or, as a rulc, in any court presided over by a superior judge. Formerly a distinction was drawn hetween utter ( $=$ outer) barristers, who on public occasions in the Jons of Court were called from the body of the hal to the first place outside the har, whilst the bencters and readers were called inner. In the Inns of Court a distinction was for merly drawn between Inner Barristers, who merly drawn between Inner Barristers, Who on $p$ phlic occasions occupied a place on a raised dais aeparated from the rest of the hall by a bar, and Utter (i.e., Outer) Barristers, who were called from among the studenta to the first place ontside the har. The distinction has long been aholished, the term barrister being now used for what were formerly termed Inner Barristers, whilst the Outer Barristers have annk again into the rank of students, from which tbey were taken. la Qucea Elizabeth's reign the Onter Barristers wera allowed to practige in law courts, but under most other English aovereigua they simply took part in readings and moots at the lnna of Conrt. A now obnolete regulation, made in 1603, required that no one should be allowed to study for the har nuless he were a gentleman by descent; but at least since 1762 atudy for the bar has been open, on certaia conditions, to any member of the community. A barrister can be disbarred, appeal, howaver, beiag allowed him to the judges. The 1 rish bar is regulated almost exactly like that of Englaod. Io Scotland there is a difference of name, barristers being called advocates. In America Attomey is the ordinary term.

the beam above it. When put in action against a wall, it was spung horizontally by men who sueceeded each other in constant relaya, the blow which it gave to the masonry at each vibration being rendered all the more effective that one end of it was arned with iron. This, being generally formed like a ram's head, originated the name ories (rsm), by which it was known amoog the Romans, sad battering-ram, whieh it obtaias among ourGelves. A roof or shed covered it to protect the soldiers who worked it from hostile missiles, and to facilitate locomotion it was placed or wheels.

1. Law. Trial by battle, or wager of battle (or battel, as the spelling was): A barbarons method of deciding in the conrt of last resort by personal combat, all civil and criminal questions turning on disputed matters of fact The practice aeems to have beeuimmermorially in use among the Northern nations; the Bur gundians reduced it to atated forms about the ead of the fifth century; from them it passed ead of the fifth century; from them it passed to the Franks and Nomnsns, and through William the Conqueror cane to be establishee in England. It was used (1) in courts-martial or courts of chivalry and honour; (2) in appeals of felony; and (3) upon cases joined in a writ of right-the last and most sulemn decision of real property. In civil actions the parties at variance sppointel champions to fight for them, but in appeals of felony they had to do so thernsclves. The weapons were batons of an ell long, aod a four-cornered target. The combat went on till the stars appeared in the evening, unless one of the combatants proved recreant and cried craven. If he did an, or if his champion lost the battle, Divine Providence was supposed to have decided that his cause was bad. If the one who cided that his cause was bad. If the one who thus failed was appellant agalnst a charge of thus failed was appellant agalnst a charge of murder, he was held to have done the felonions deed, and withont more ado was hanged. Henry 1I. struck the first hlow at the sybtem of trial by battle by piving the defendant in a case of property the oution of the grand

II Crabb thns distinguishes the words balte combat, and engagement:-"Battle is a general action requiring some preparation; combat is only particular and sometimes unexpected Combat bas more relstion to the sct of fighting than battle, which is used with more propriety simply to denominate the action. In the battle the combat was obstinate and bloody. In this sense engagement and combat are analo gous, but the former has a specific relation to the ageuts and parties engaged, which is not implied in the latter term. We speak of person being present, or wounded, or fighting desperately in ao engajement; on the other hand, we speak of engaging in a combat, challeoging to single combat, &c. Baltles are fought between armies only; they are gained or lost. Combats are entered into between individuals, in which they seek to destroy or individuals, in which they seek to destroy or excel. Engagements are confined to no particular number, only to such as are engaged. the whole body is engaged; partial engage ments respect only buch as are fought by small parties or companies of an army.

I. As a copula connecting the subject and its predicate: in which case it denotes exiat nce in relation to that predicats; existence the character of which is to be explained by the word with which the aubstantive verb is connected ; to be ; to continue, to remain ; to be present in a place; to happen in a particular way; to happen accordlag to ordination or appolntment; to become; to aim; with various other shades of meanlag. Rankng as a copula or apposition verb, now echnically viewed as one of incomplete predlcation (see Baina higher ing. Gram., It is followed by a nominative in apposition with it, and not with an objective as would be the case were it a transitive verb. Thus in the example from Acts xii. 15 , given below, " 1 t is his angel," the noun angel is in the nominative and not in the objective case.

I Be is defective, the omiasions being supplied by parts from other verbs not in the (from A.S. com $=$ to be), were, was (from A.S. (from A.S. com = to be), were,

 Be was also used where we now employ are.Be they better than these kingdoms?"-A mos vi. 2. It was also used in $O$. Scotch for let or let be $=$ not to inention, not to speak of. to except. (Jamieson.)
(a) Crabb thus distinguishes between the verbs to be, to exist, and to subsist:-" $T o$ be is spplicable either to the accidents of things, of to the substances thenselves; to exist only to substances or things that stand or exist of themselves. We Gay of qualities, of forms of actions, of arrangement, of movement, and of every different relation, whether real, ideal or qualificative, that they are: we say of matiter, of apirit. of body, and of all aub starces, that they exist. Man is man, and will be man under all circumstances; he exists under every known climate, de. O being and existence as nouns, the fornaer not only designates the abstract netion of being, but is metaphorically employed for the sen aible object that is; the latter is confined altogether to the abstruct sense. Hence. luman beings; beings animate and inanimate; liuman beings; beings animate andinanimate; God, of innumerable worlds, of evil. Being may in aome cases be indifferently amployed or existence, partlcularly in the grave style when speaking of animate objects, as the being of $a$ God; our frall being; and when qualified in a componud form is preferable, as our well-being. Subsist is properly s species of existing; it denotea temprary or partial existence. Every thing exists by the creative and preservative power of the Almighty; that which subsists depends for ita existence upon the chances and changes of this mortal life. To exist therefore designates simply the event of beirg or existing; to subsist convers the aresory ideas of the mode and duration of existing. Man exists while the vital or apiritual part of him remaina ; he subsists by what he obtaine to support life."
(b) To be, to become, to grow, are thus dis-ciminated:- De is porlis withnut regard to what he was io not before. We judge of a man by what he is, but we cannot judge of him by what he will become. To become includes no idea of the moda or circumstance of its becoming; to grow is to become by a gradual process: a man may become a good man from a vicious ona, in consequence of a sudden action on his mind ; but he grows in wisdom and virtue by means of an increase in knowledge sod experience. Animals bear their young; inanimate objects yield their produce. An apple-tree bears apples; the earth yields fruits. Beur masks properly the naturai power of bringing forth something of its own kind yield is ssid of the result or qusntum brough forth. Shrubs bear lesves, flowers, or berries, according to their natural properties: flowers yield seeds plentifully or otherwise as they are yiveld seeds plentifuly or othed circumstances."
(b) To bear, to carry, to convey, and to transport sre thus discriminsted :- "To bear is simply to put the weight of sny sibstance upon one's self; to curry is to remove it from the spot where it was: ws always bear in oarrying, but not vice versd. That which cannot be easily borne must be burdensoms to carry. Since bear is contined to personal aervice, it may be used in the sense of carry, when the latter implies the remova of anything by any other body. The bearer of a letter or parcel is he who oarries it io his hand; the carrier of parcels is he who employs a oonveyance. Convey and transport are siecies of carrying. Carry in its particular sense is employed either for nersonal exertions or sctions performed by the help of ather or sctions performed by the help of other for auch actions as are performed not by infor auch actions as are performed not by infolediate personal intervoution or exertion : a porter carries grouls on his knot; gooda are conveyed in a waggon or cart ; they are transported in a vessel. Convey expresses simply the mode of removing; transport anoexes the ideas of place and distance. Merchants get conveyed into their warehouses goods which have be n transported from distant countries." (Crabb: Eng. Synoti.)

II. Technically:

1. On the Stock Exchange: A cant phrase for one who cootracts to sell oo a specified day certain stock not beionging to him, at the market price then prevailing, on receiving imaginary payment for them at the rate whicll ohtains when the promise was made. It now becomes his jnterest that the stock on which he bas speculated shonld fall in price; and he is tempted to effect this end by circulating adverse rumours regarding it ; whilst the purchaser, called a "bull," seea it to his advantage to make the stock rise. The origin of the term is uncertain. Dr. Warton derives it from the proverbial expression of selling the skin befora the bear is caught, but he does not assign any explanation to the contrary term bull; others point out that the action of the former is like that of a bear pulling down something with his paws, while that of the latter ia euggestive of a bull tossing a person up with his horns. (b) To beot, to defeat, to orerpower, to rout, and to overthrow are this discriminated :--"To beat is an indefinite term expressive of no particular degree: the being teaten may be attended with greater or less damage. To be defected is a specific disadvantage; it is a failure in a particular object of more or less importance. To be overpowered is s positive loss; it is a loss of the power of acting which nay be of longer or shorter duration. To be ronted is a temporary disadventage; a rout alters the course of proceeding, bat does not disable. To be overthrown is the greatest of all mischiefs, and is applicable only to great armies and great concerns: an overthrow (cmo monly decrues a contest. Beat is 8 terin which reffects more or less dishonour on the gencral or the army, or on both. Defeat is au indiferent term : the best generals may sometimes be defeated by circumstances which are sbove human control, Overpowering is coupled with no particular honour to the wimer. nor disyrace to the loser; superior power is oftener the result of good fortune than of akill: the bravest snd finest troops may be overpowerel in cases which exceed human power. A rout is always disgracefur, particularly to the army ; it always arises from want of firmmess. An ouerthrow is fatal rather than dishonourable; it excites pity rather thau coutempt." The beautiful: Abstract beauty; the notion of the assemblage of qualitiea that constitute beauty.

- Crabb thus distinguishes between the words beautiful, fine, handsome, and pretty:"Of these epithets, which denote what is pleasing to the eye, beautiful conveys the strongest meaning ; it marks the possession of that in its fullest extent, of which the other terma denote the possession in part ouly. Fineness, handsomeness, and prettiness are to beauty as parts to a whole. When taken in relation to persons, a woman is beautiful who in feature and complexion possesses a grand assemblage of graces: a woman is fine who with a striking figure unites shape and symmetry; a woman is handsome who has good features, and pretty if with symmetry of feature be united delicacy. The beautifut compreheads regularity, proportion, and a due distribution of colour, and every particular which can engage the attention ; the fine must be coupled with grandeur, majesty, and strength of figure; it is incompatible with that which is small: a little woman can never be fine. Tha handsome is a goman cal assemblage of what is agreeable; it ia geaeral assemblage of what is agreable, in is the alsence of all deformity. Prettiness is always coupled with aimpileity; it is incompatible with what is large: a tall woman with masculine featurea cannot be pretty. Beauty is peculiarly a female perfection; in the mal aex it is rather a defect; but though a male may not be beautiful or pretty, he may be fine or handsome. When relating to other objects, beautivul, fine pretty, have a strong analogy but handsome differs too esaeatlally from the rest to admit of coninerisor With reapect to the abjects of nature the beautiful is dis thed in the of whe played in thears it is marked by elegance, variety it appears it is marked by elegance, variety, harmony, proportion, but a bove all, that sott neas which is peculiar to female beauty; the fine, on the contrary, is associated with the grand, and the pretty with the aimple. The aky presents either a beautiful aspect, or fine aspect; but not a pretty aspect. A rura sceoe is beautiful when it unites richness and diversity of natural objects with superior cultivation; it is fine when it preseats the bolder and more impressive features of nature, consiating of rocka and mountains; it is pretty when, divested of all that ia cxtraordinary, it presents a smiling view of nature in the gry attire of shruba and many coloured fower and verdant meadows and luxuriant glelds. Beauti/ul sentiments have much in them to interest the affections, as well as the under standing; they make a vividimpression. Fine entiments mark an elevated mind and a lofti ness of conccpition; they occupy the under standing, and afford scope for reflection; the make a strong impression, Pretty idcas are but pleashug associations or combinations that anty amuse for the time being, without pro dueing any lasting impression. We may seak of a beautiful poem, although not a beoutiful tragedy; but a fine tragedy, and a pretty comedy. Inagery may be beautiful and Aute, but seldom pretty." (Craib: Eng, Synonyms.)

a For an exceflent account of the living beaver sce The Amcrican Bearer and his Works, by Lewia H. Morgan, Philadelphia, 180s, 8vo.

Remaina of the comuson beaver have been met with in Euplizulin pout-tertiary peatbeds in Cambridgeshire and Eisex. In 1850, When excavations were heing made for the servoirs, a Iittle north of the Lea, between the stations of Cliapton and St. Jaimes'a Street, Walthamstow, oa the Chingford Branch of the Great Eastern Railway, aloundant remains of the beaver werc discovered, whilst the accumutations of fallen timber favoured tha conclusion drawn Ly Dr. H. Woodward that formerly ancient neaver-dams existed on the Lea, then (as now tha America) causing floods, which inundated and destroyed much of tha furast. (See Brit. A ssoc. Rep. for 1869 , ii. 104.) An allied but much larger species, Trogontherium Cuvieri (Owen), has lueen found fossil in the Norfolk Forest bed, and another in North America, the Castoroides Ohioensis (Foater).

If (a) Crabb thus distinguighes the ierms ecoming, decent. rt, aod suitable:-" What is becoming respects the mauner of being in society, auch as it ought, as to person, time, and place. Decency regards the manner of displaying one's aelf, so as to be approved and respected. Fitness and suitableness relate to the diaposition, arrangement, and order of either being or doing, according to persous, thinge, or circumstances. The becoming consists of an exterior that is pleasiog to the view: decency involves moral propriety; it is regulated by the fixed rulea of good breediag : finess is regulated by locsl circumstances, snd suitableress by the eatablished customs and usagea of society. The dress of 8 woman is becoming that reoders her person more agreeabla to the eys; it is decent if it no wise offend modesty ; it is fit ir it be what the occasion requires; it is suitable if it be accorling to the rank and character of the wearer. What is becoming varies for every individual ; the age, the complexion, the stature, and the habits of the person must bs consalted in order to obtain the appearance which ia becoming; what becomes a young famale, or one of fair complexion, may not become one who is farther advanced in life, or Who has dark features. Decency is one and the atame for all ; all civilized oatioos have drawn the exact line between the decent and indecent, although fashion may sometimes draw females aside from this ling. Fitness varies with the seasons, or the circumstauces of peraons What is fit for the wioter is unfit for the summer, or what is ft for dry weather is unfir for the wet; what is fit for town is not fit for the country; what is fit for a healthy person not fit for one that ia infirm. Suitableness coommodates itaelf to tha external circum tances and conditions of persoos; the house the furniture, the equipage of a priace, must suitable to his rsok. tha retioue of an mbassador must be suitable to the character which he has to maintaio, and to the wealth dignity, and importance of the nation whose monarch he repreaeata.
(b) Becoming, comely, aod graceful are thus diacriminated:-Theae epithets 'are employed to mark in general what is agreeable to the eye. Becoming denotes less than comely, and this less than graceful: nothiog can be comely or graceful which is untecoming; although many things are becoming which are neither comely nor gracefut. Becoming respects the decorations of the person, and the exterior deportment; comely respects natural embellishments; graceful oatural or artiticial accomplishments: manner is becoming: figure is comely; air, figure, or sttitude is gracefut. Beooming is relative ; it depends on taste and opinion, on accordance with the prevailing zentimenta or particular circumatances of soclety. Comely and graceful are absolute; thay ara qualities felt and acknowledged by all," (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

Compare in Sw. bifinn, biff stek, and Dut. biefn, bief-stuk = Eng. beef-steak. A word introduced by the Normans. Trench directs attention to the fact that while in English the domestic animals, as long as they are living, are called by Saxon names, their tiesh, after they are dead, has, as a rule, some Norman abucilation, as if the Saxons had tended then while living, and the Normans eaten them when dead. "Thus." he says, ox, steer, cow, are Saxon, but beef Norman sheep is Saxon, but mutton Norman. So it is severally with swine and pork, deer and vemison, fowl snd pullet. Bacon, the only flesh which perhaps ever came withln his (the Saxon's) reach, is the single exception." (Trench: The Study of Words.).] (See slso Scott's Ivanhoe.)
A. As substentive:

1. An ox, s cow, or a bull, regarded as fit for tood.
II In this sense it has a plural beeves.

2. The flesh of the ox or the cow, used either fresh or salted. It is the most butritious of all kinds of meat, and is well sdapted to the most delicate constitutions. It should be well cooked, as it has been proved that underdone beef frequently produces tape worm. Good beef is known by its having a clear uniform fat, a firm texture, s fine open grain, and a rich reddish colour. Meat which feels damp and clammy should be avoided, as it is zenerally unwholesome. Fresh beef loses in boiling 30 per cent. of ita weight; in roasting it loses about 20 per cent. The amount of nitrogenoas matter found to be present in one pound of good beef is about four ounces. In the raw state it contains 50 per cent. of water. [Dx.]

Ital. birra: Wel. bir; Arm. byer, bir, ber.]
A. As substantive: A fermented aqueous infuaion of malt and hopa, or of malt, augar, and bops. The term is now applied to all mal liquors prepared by the process of brewing.
Beers are divided into two great, classee, ales and portera, the former being chiefly propared from pale malt, and having a pale amber colour, whilst in the preparation of the latter a certain proportion of roasted or black malt is used along with the pals malt. Thia increases the colour, and gives to the porter a somewhat bitter flavour. These two classes are subdivided into a great many varieties, depending on the atreagth of the wort used and the amoust of hopa added. Thus we have pale ale, mild ale, bitter ale, barley wine, table beer, &c. Stout, bruwn stout, double brown stout, &c, are merely richer and stronger kinds of porter.
Gearine beer should conaist of water, malt extract (dextrine and cilucose), hop extract, and alcohol. The quantity of alcohol in beer varies from two per cent. in table beer to ten or even twelve per cent. in strong ale, and the extract from three to fifteen per cent, the latter giving to the beer ita nutritive value. The alcohol present alwaya bears a relation to the smount of sugar fermented. A good aonnd beer ahould be perfectly transparent and have a brilliant colour sad a pleassant snd have a brilliant colour sad a pleassat tlavour. Sour beers and beers that are thick are very unwholesome.
Legialative acts have been passed imposing severe penalties on any brewer or publican who shall have in his pussession, or who shall sell adulterated beer, sod a further heary penslty on any druggist or other person who shall sell sny adnlterant to a licensed brewer. Notweer has been, and atill is very largely adulterated. The adulterants used at the present time are, however, of a comewhat harmless character. The publican purchases from the brewer a cask of gennine bear. To this he adds, for the sake of profit, a large proportion of water. The beer being now reduced in colour and flavour, must be "doctored." Molasses, foota-sagar, liquorice, or caramei is alded to increase the colour; gralns of paradise, cayenne, and in some cases ereo tobacco, to give pungency ; and mustard, copperas, aalt, and alun to impart a frothy hesd to the beer. The nitrogenous matter extrscted from the mait, and present in the original beer, is thus reduced to a minimum, and the beer-drinken pays for a liquor which may be sweet and pleasant to the taste, but is almost destitute of nourishuent. Sait is added, not so moch (as aome publicans aay) to preserve the bear, as to increase the thirst, sad thereby impart as craving for more drink. Cocculus indicus, pieric scid, atrychnine, snd opium, asid to be picric scid, atrychnine. snd opium, asid to be

I Crabb thus distinguishes the veriss to begin, to commence, sand to enter upon:-" Begin and commence are so strictly allied in signiflcation, that it is not easy to diacover the difference in their epplication, although a minute difference does exist. To begin respecto the order of tims ; to commence, the exertion of setting sbout a thing. Begin is opposed to end; commence, to complete: a person begins s thing with a view to ending it; he commences with the view of completing it. To begin is With the view of completing it. To begin is either transitive or intransitive; to begine by apologising; he commences his speech with an spology.' To begin is used either for things or persons; to commence, for persons only: all things have thetr beginning; in order to effect anything we must make a commencement. Begin is more colloquial than commence: thus we say, to begin the work, to commence operations. To commence and enter upon sre as closely allied in sense as the former words; they differ principally in application: to comnence seema rather to denote the making an experiment; to enter upm, that of first doing what has not been tried before: we commence on undertaking; we erter upon an employment."  Rabylonisn, Assyrian, and Accadian Bel, Belu. Elu $($ EL $)=$ Lord.]
Accadian, Assyriar, \& Bobylonian Myth.: A "god" mentioned in Scripture, in Isa xlvi. 1: Jer. 1. 2; 1i. $44 ;$ in the Septuagint, in Baruch vi. 40 , snd in the apocryphal additions to the Book of Daniel (Bel anothe Draoon), as well as by classical authors. Much new light has recently been thrown on Bel's characteristics and position io the heavenly hierarchy, by the examination of the cuneiforn tablets and sculptures. It has been discovered that, prior to $1600 \mathrm{~B} . \mathrm{C}$. , the highly interesting Turanian people called Accadians, the inventors of the cuneiform writing, who wielded extensive authority in Western Asia before the Semitic Assyriana and Babylonians had come into notice, worshipped as their first triad of gods Anu, ruling over the heaven; Elu, Belu, or Bel, over the earth; and Ea over the sear. Bel's three children, or three over the sea. Bel e three children, or three of hia children, were Shamas, the Sun-god; of hia children, were Shamas, the Sun-god; Sin, the Moon-god; and Ishtar, the Accadian Venus. Sayce shows that aome first-born Senuls. Sayce shows that rome first-born chilimen were vicariously offered in sacrifice by fire to the Sun-god. From the Accadians human sacrifice passed to various Scmitic tribes and nations. Bel's name Elu identifies him with the Pbenician El, who, in a time of trouble, offered his first-horn son, "the beloved," on a high place, by fire. It is not settled whether or not Bel was the same alao as the Phenician Baal. To the wrath of Bel the deluge was attributed. In Scripture times he was known exclusively as a Babylonian divinity, being distinguished from both Nebo and Merodach. In the later Babylonisn empire, however, Merodach came to be generslly identitied with Bel, though sometimes distinguished from him, being called "the lesser Bel." (Sayce, Boscawer, Fox Talbot, Bosunquet, icc, in Trans. Bib. Archaol. Soc., rols. 1-vi.)

- Bel enters as an element into various Babylonian names, as Belteshazzar $=$ the Prince of Bel (Dan. i. 7; Iv. 8, 9, 19).
Bol and the Dragon, s. One of the books of the Apocrypha or, more precisely, certain apocryphal chapters added to the canonical Book of Dsniel. The Jews consider them as no part of their scriptures. They were peaned probably by an Alexsndrisn Jew, the language used being not Hebrew, nor Aramean, but Greek. The Church of Rome accepts Bel and the Dragon as part of the IIoly Scripture: most, if not all, Proteatant chnrches reject it. In Roman Cstholic worship it is resd on Ash Wednesday, and was 80 in the old lectionsry of the English Church on the 23nd of November. The new lectionary has it not either on that or sny other dste. The story of Bel snd the Dragon tells how Daniel enlightened Cyrus, who is represented as having been a devoat worshipper of Bel, by proving that the immense supplies of food laid before the idol were really consumed, not by it or by the inhabitiag divinity, but by the priests and their families. On Cyrus arging that the dragon, also worshipped, was at least a living God, Dasiel pnisoued it, for which he was thrown lato a lions" den, where the prophet Hzbakknk fed him. Ultimately he was released, sud his persecutors put to death.

T The above narrative mast not be confounded with one called also "Bel and the Dragon," translated by Mr. Fox Talbot from the cuneiform tablets.
Mr. Talbot believes that the dragon, seven. headed like the one in Revelation, would, if the tablets were complete, prove the ssine being that seduced some of the hesvenly "gods," or ancels, from their allegisnc (Rev. xii. 4; Jude 6), for which he was alain by Bel. The resemblance is not to the apocryphal book now under consideration, but to the combat between Michael ond the Dragon in Rev. xii. 7-17. (H. Fox Talbet in Trans. Bib. Archeol Soc., vol. iv., 1875, p. 349.)

Paleont. (Of the form Belemnites, rendered in English Belemnitc): A genus of fossil chambercd shells, the typical one of the family Belemnitida. The slow progress of the human mind towards scientiffe truth, and the circuitous ronte which the limitation of its powers compel it to take in reaching that goal, are beautifully exemplified ly the ancceasive hypothesea broached as to the nature of the belemnite. The firat was that it was a product of the mammal called by the Romans lynx, and by the Oreeka dúys (lunghx), prolably the Caracal (Felis caracal). It was therefore called Lapis (lungkourion), though oome think that by these words were meant reddish amber, or the mine ral tourmaline or the hyacinth, the Scriptural jacinth. The puzzling fossils figured next as Idai daclyli, that is, "fingers from Mount lda," freely translated or transformed in the Middle Ages into "devil's fagers." Then electricity was called in to account for them, and they wers named Thunderstones (Lapides Mulminantes) and Picks, or, less hypothetically, "Arrow Stones." At a more advanced period they were looked upon as stalactites, or as crystals which never had pertained to living beinga. At length the true view struggled into existence that they were organic remains. Held by Von Tressau, Klein, Breynius, Da Coata, Brander, and Plott to be shells, the proper position of which they could not determine, Cuvier and Lamarck made a great etep forward in ranking them as cephalopods with an interual ahell, a conclusion confirmed by thers. The lastnamed palæontologiat placed the belemuite in the Di. branchinte order of Cephalopods.
One cssential part of the shell is a belemnite restoned. phragnocone [see a. Ink bag. b. There have been found also traces of the contour of the large sessile eyes, the funnel, a great proportion of the muacular parts of the mantle, the remains of two lateral fins, eight cephalic arma, each apparently provided with twelve to twenty pairs of alender elongated horny hooks. Owen considers that the belemnite combined characters at present divided among the three cephalopodona genera sepia, Onychotenthis, and Sepiola.

- Crabb thus distiaguishes betweea the terme belief, credit, trust, and faith:-"Belief is geaeric, the others are sprecific terms; we believe whon we credit and trust, but not alwaya vice versa. Belief rests on no particu lar person or thing; but credit and trust rest oa the anthority of one or more individuale. Everything is the eubject of belief which produces one'a asseat: the events of humsn life are credited upou the anthority of the aarrator: the words, promises, or the fategrity of individuale are trusted ; the power of persous and the virtue of things are objects of faith Belief aad credit are particular actione or Belief aad credit are particular actione or sentimenta : trust and faith are permanent disjositions of tha mind. Things are entitled to our belief, persoas to our credit ; but people repose trust or have faith in others.
"Belief, trust, and faith have a religions application, which credit has not. Belief is simply an act of the underatanding; trust and faith are active moving principles of the mind in which the beart is concerned. Belief doee not extend beyond an assent of the mind to any given proposition ; trust and faith are lively sentimenta which impel to action. Belief ia to trust and faith as cange 10 effect : there may be belief without either truat or faith; but there can be no trust or faith witheut belief. Wa believe that there is a God, whe is belief. Wa believe that there is a God, whe is we therefore trust in Him for His protection We therefore trust in Him for His protection of ourselves. We believe that Jesus Christ of ourselves. We believe that Jesus Christ faith in His redeemiag grace to sava us from our aias." (Crabb: Eng. synon.)
- Professor Hain considers that belief largely dejends upon the will. He aays, "It will be readily admitted that the state of mind called belief is, ia many cases, a concomitant of our activity. But I mean to go farther than this, activity. buffirm that belief has ne meantug, ex and to afirm that betief has ne meanag, ex cept in reference to our actiona; the essence or inport of it is auch as to place it nuder the

2. Hydrostatics, ©c. Hydrostatic Bellows: An instrument designed as a toy rather than for use. It is, however, of some utility as illustrating what is called the hydrostatic paradox. Two horizontal flat bosrds, united by leather rolded st the sides so as to be capsble of expansion, constitute a chamber, into which water is introluced from a long narrow pipe rising vertically. By bydrostatical law this water will act with such pressure on the interior of the clamber that it will fonee the ppper board to rise as far as the leather will permit, even if heavy woights be leather will permit, even if put upon it to keep it down.

1. Celtic Myth.: A auperatitions observance now or formerly practised among the Scottish and Irish Celts, as well as in Cumberland and Lancashire. The Scotch observed the Beltsne festival chiefly on the 1st of May (old style), though in the west of that country St. Peter's Day, June 29, was preferred. In lreland thera Day, dwo Belteins, one on the list of May, and were two bettins, one on the 21st of June. The ceremonies varied in different plsces, but one essential paried of them everywhere was to light $s$ fire. At Callander, in Perthshire, the boys went to the moors, cut a table out of sods, sat ronad it, lit a fire, cooked and ate s custard, baked an oatmeal cake, diyided it ioto equal seginents, hlackened one of these, drew lots, and then compelled the boy who drew out the blackened piece to leap three times through the fire, with the view of obtsining for the district a year of prosperity. In lreland csttle wers driven through the fire. Originally human sacrifices may have been offered, and then, as primitive society began to discern the cruelty of this practice, it may have been deemed enough for the victim to pass been deemed enough for the vicing burnt to through the fire in place of being burnt to death. Then, eattle would be substituted for death. Then, eattle would be substituted for human beinga, sid, last of sil, cakas, meal and fruit wonld be offered in the natural and fruit wonld be offered in the natural course of transition from bloody to unbloody sicrifices. [Sacrifice, $\delta_{0 .}$ II. 1.] Merrymakings came at length to attend the Beltane festival. [See the examples under the compound words.]

enbject to his abbot．These vows wers irre－ oubject to his abbot．These vows wers irre－ vocshle，whereas up to that time the monke hed been allowed to alter the regulstions of thelr founder at their pleasure．The date of St．Benedict＇a death is generally placed in 643，though another account makee it 547. The rule he instituted wes adopted at an early period by various other monastic com－ manities；it was confirmed，about fifty－two years after the deeth of its Conader，by Pope Gregory the Great，and was ultimately ac－ cepted with more or less enthuaiasm by nearly anl the moakish communities of the wast with the lspee of time
As long as the Beoedictises remeined poor they were a bleesing to the countriss in Which they lived，and eapecially to Germany， apeading as they did several hours a day in gandening，agriculture，and mechanical labour， and another portion of their time in reading， besides keeping school ontside the walls of their convents．Science and literature are also indebted to them for having copled many of the classical authore end preserved such know－ ledge as existed in their age．But when at length their merits had drawn much wasith to their order（individually they were potallowed to retain property），iuxury and indoleace sapped their virtues and diminished their ia－ fluence for good．Afterwards becoming re－ formed，especially in Fraface in the seventeenth century，the Benedictloea sgain readered ser－ vice by the igsue of an excellent edition of the Fathera．
The Benedictine habit seems to heve been introduced after the age of St．Benedict．It consisted of a loose black coat or a gown reachiag to their feet，asd having large wide aleeves．Under it was a flancel habit white in colour and of the asme size，whilat over all was a scepular．The head－dress was a hood or cowl pointed at the tip，and boots were worn upon the feet．From the predominantly llack colour of their attire they were some－ times called Black Monks．They must not be confounded with the Black Friars，who were Dominicans．［Black Faiars．］
There were Benedictine nuns as well as monks．When they originated is macertain． There were first and last ausny branches of Benedictinea，as the Cistercians，Celestines， Brandmontensians，Priemonstratensians，\＆c．

[^58]all. The first two denote modes of action; the latter three efther modes of action or modes of sentiment. The sincere well-wisher to his fellow-creaturee is beneficent according to hie means; he is bountiful in providing for the comfort and happiness of others; he is munifoent in dispensing favours; he is generous in imparting his property; he is liberal in all he does. Beneficence and bounty are the peculiar characteristics of the Deity: with him the will and the act of doing good are commensurata only with the power: he was beneficent to us as our Creator, and continues his beneficence to us by his daily pretinues his beneficence to us by hie daily preservation and protection; to some, however, servation and protection; to some, however, he has been more botniffulthan to others, by providing them with an unequal share of the good things of this life. The beneficence of man is regulated by the bounty of Providance to whom much is given, from him much will be required. Good men are ready to believe that they are bot stewards of ail God's gifts, for the use of such as are less bountifully pro vided. Princes are munificent, friends ar generous, patrons liberal. Munificence is mea sured by tha quality and quantity of the thing bestowed; generosity by the extent of tine sacrifice made: liberality by the warmoth of the spirit discovered. B. Luc: Benefit of clergy (Privilegium clericale): The advantage dcrived from the Thefment of the plea "1 am a clergyman." When, in medix val times, a clergyman was arrajgnod on certain charges he was jermitted to pit forth the plea that, with respect to the offeace of which he was accused, he was not under the jurisdiction of the civil courts, bat, being a clergyman, was entitied to be tried by his spirituol snperiors. [Clergev, Clenk.] lis such cases the bishop or ordinary was wont to demand that his clerks should be remitted to bin out of the king's courts as soon as they were indicted; though at length the custom became increasingly prevalent of deferring the plea of being a clergyman till after conviction, when it was brought forward in arrest of undgment. The cases in which the benefi of clergy might be urged were such as affected the life or limbs of the offender, high treason however excepted. In these circunstances laymen often attempted to pass themsel ves otf as clergymen, when the practice was to bring a book sud ask the accused person to read a passage. If he conld do so, his plea of being a clergyman was admitted; if he failed, it was rejected. The practical effect of this was to give the bishop, the power, if he felt so disposed, of removing every reader from the urisdiction of the ordinary courts.
In 1489, Heury V1i. restricted the privilege. A layman able to read who pleaded his clergy " could henceforth do so only once and in order that he might be identified if he attempted it again, he was burnt in the hand. Ilenry VIil., in 1512, nbolished benefit of clergy with regard to murderers and other great criminsls. The practice of requiring the accused person to read was put an enc to in 1700 ; but it was not till $182 \%$ that the swept the benefit of clergy itself sway.
(a) Crabb thus distinguishas between the Words bengeft, favour, kindness, and civilily:-
"Benefits and favours are granted by moperiors; kindnesses and civilities pass between equals. Benefits serve to relieve actnal want; favours tend to promote the interest or convenience. Kindnesses and civilitias eerve to afford mutual accommodation by ereciprocity of kind officas. Kindnesses ane Dore endearing than civilities, and pass mootly between those known to each other ; civilities may pass between atrangers. Dependence affords an opportunity for conferring benefits; partiality gives rise to fanours; kindnesses are the result of personal regard, civilities of general benevolence. Benefits tend to draw those closer to each other who by station of life are set at the greatest distance from each other: affection is engendird in ino benefis, and de voted attachment in him who is benefited. Farours increase obligation beyond its due limits: if they are not asked and granted with discretion, they may produce servility on the one hand, and baughtiness on the other Kinchuesses are the offspring and parent of affection; they convert our multiplied wants into so mauy enjoyments: civilities are the sweets which we gather in the way as we pass along the journey of life.
(b) Benefit, service, and good office are thus discriminated:- These terms, ike the former ( $v$. Benefit, favour), agree in denoting some netion performed for the good of another, but they differ in the principle on which the action is performed. A benefit is jerfectly gratuitons, it produces an obligstion : a service is not altogether gratuitous; it is that at least which may be expected, though it cannot be demanded : a good office is between the two ; it is in part gratuitous, and in part sucb as one may reasonably expect, Benefits flow from superiors, snd services from inferiors or equals; but good offices are performed by cquals only. Princes confer benefits on their subjects; aubjects perform services for their princes: nelghbours do good offices for each other. Benejits consist of such things as serve to relieve the diffeulties, or advance the interests, of the receiver : services consist in those acts which tend to lessen the trouble, or increase the ease and convenience, of the person served: good offices consist in the use of one's credit, influence, and mediation for the advantage of another; it is a species of voluntary service. Humanity leads to benefits the zesl of devotion or friendship readers services; general good will dictates pood ofices." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

2. Law de Eng. Hist. (pl. Benevolences): The attractive name formerly given to compulaory loane to dleguise their real charactar. Every one, however, saw through the transparent device. It is behieved that benevolences were levied as eariy as the Anglo-Saxon thmes. They were inconsistant with the provisione of Magns Charta, gained in 1215. yet they continued to be exacted. One notable benevolence was that raised by Edward IV. In 1473. In 1484, Richsrd IlI. gained popularity by procuring : parliamentary condemnation of the system, and the next year imposed a benevolence, as it nothing had happrened. Henry VII. in 1492, and Jsmes I. In 16I3, raised money in a similar way ; and in the reigu of Charles $I$. the exac tion of benevolences was one of the popular grievsnces which produced the clvil war though less potent in the effects which it produced than the celebrated "ship-money." [Ship-monev.] The Bill of Rights, pasaed in February, 1689, once more declared them illegal, and thls time with effect." "Benevolences," "sida," and "free gifts," have now given place to taxes, boldly called by their proper name.
"After the terrihe lenson given hy the Lang Parlia ment, ever the Cahal did not venture to recommend

(a) Crabb thus distinguishes between benevolence and beneficence :-"Benevolence is literally well willing; beneficence is literally well doing. The formuer conaists of intention, the latter of action ; the former is the cange, the latter the result. Benevolence may exist without bereficence; but beneficence alwaya supposea benevolence: 8 man is not said to be beneficent who does good from sinister views. The benevolent man enjoys but half his happineas if he cannot be beneficent; yet there will atill remain to him an smple store of enfoyment in the contemplation of others' happiness. He the contemplation on others gratified only with that happlness who is gratitied only with that happiness which hmascif has been instrumenta in produc,
(b) The following ia the distinction between benevolence, benignity, huma nity, kininess, and tenderness:-Benevolence snd benignity lie in the will; humanity lies in the heart; kindness and terderuess in the affections. Benevolence indicates a general good will to all mankind benignity a particular good will, fowing out of certain relations. Humanity is a general tone of feeling; kindness and templerness are particular modea of feeling. Benevolence conparticular modea of the wish or intention to do good; it is confined to no station or object : the beneis confined to no station or object: the benevolent man may be rich or poor, and his volent man may be tich or poor, and his benevolence will be exerted wherever there is benevolence will be exerted wherever there an opportunity of doing good. Beniguity is always associated with power, and sceonpanied with condescension. Pienevolence in its fullest sense is the sum of moral excellence, and comprehends every otber virtue; when taken in this acceptation, benignity, humanity, kindness, snd tenderness are but modes of benevolence. Benevolence and benignity tend to the communicating of happiness humanity is concerned in the removal or evil. Benevolence is common to the Creater the former has the knowledge and power as well as the will to do goorl; man often has the will to do good without having the power to earry it into effect. Benignity is ascribed to the stars, to heaven, or to prinees; ignorant and shperstitious people ore appt to ascribe their good fortune to the benign influence of the stars rather than to the gracions dispengations of Providence. Humanity belongs to man only; it is his peculiar characteristic, and is as universal in its spplication a benevolence; wherever there ia distress, humanily fliea to its relief. Kindness and tenderness are partial modes of affection, confined to those who know or are related to each other: we are kind to friends and acquaintancea, tender towards those whe are nesr snd dear.

Chem. : $\mathrm{C}_{2} \mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{NH}\left(\mathrm{C}_{8} \mathrm{H}_{5} \mathrm{CO}\right)$
Also called Hippuric Acid. It occurs in large quantitica in the urios of sraminivorous aoimala in the form of alkalins salta. It crystallises in loag, slender, white, aquare prisms; it dissolves ia 400 parts of cold water, also io hot alcohol. Whea mixed with putrid matter, it forms bethzoic acid. Hippuric acid ia monobasic ; hipzoic acid. Hippuric acid ia monobasic; hippuratea of the ankinea are very solubol chlorile we formed by the action of benzoyl chloride Beozamide is a crystalline anbstance, nearly insoluble in cold but easily soluble in boiliag water, also in alcobol and ether. It melta at $115^{\circ}$, and volatilises at $290^{\circ}$.

bĕn'-zène, s. [Eng. bent(oin), and auffix -ene.]
Chem.: $\mathrm{C}_{8} \mathrm{H}_{6}$. An aromatic hydrocarbon, also called benzol or phenyl hydride, discovered in 1825 by Faraday io the liquid coodensed during the compression of oil gas; it was called by him bicarburet of hydroget. Io 1849, it was found in coal tar by C. B. Mansfield, who lost his life while experimenting with it on the 25 th of February, 1855. Aalline is produced from it, which again is the source of the celebrated modern dyes, mauve, magenta, \&c. It is obtained from the more volatile portion of coaltar oil. It is also formed by distilling benzoic acid with time. Benzene is a thin, colourless, strongly refracting liquid; it boils at $82^{\circ}$. It dissolves fats, resins, iodine, aulphur, and phosphorus; sp. gr., 0'885. Benzene is formed when acetyleue is prased through a tube heated to dull redness. Many substitution producta of benzene have been formed. The stoms of C and H are arranged as shown ia the figure. The numbers placed against the $\mathbf{C}$ denote the ngainst the chenote the with regard to each other. Benzene cao, when two atoms of $\mathbf{H}$ are replaced by chlorine, \&c., or mooatomic radicala, form three modificationa, according aa the repluced II is in the position 1-2, or 1-3, or 1-4. Benzene unites with chlorine or bromine in direct snolight, forning alditive compounda, $\mathrm{C}_{6} \mathrm{H}_{6} \mathrm{Cl}_{6}$ běn'-zile, s. [Eing. benz(oin), and suffix-ile.] Chem. : $\mathrm{C}_{14} \mathrm{IH}_{10} \mathrm{O}_{2}$. A crystalline aubstance obtained by the action of chlorine on benzoin it melts at $90^{\circ}$. It is isomeric with dibeazoyl.
bĕn-z11-1c, a. [Eng. benzil(e); -ic.] Of or belonging to benzile

benalle acid,

Chem. : $\mathrm{C}_{14} \mathrm{H}_{12} \mathrm{O}_{3}$. It is called also diphenyl glycollic acid. It is obtained by the action of alcoholic potash on benzoin. On saturating the alkaline aolution with hydrochloric acid the beazilic acid aeparates in small, colourless, travapareot cryatals, which melt at $120^{\circ}$.
bĕn'-zîne, s. [Benzoline.]

Chem.: $\mathrm{C}_{13} \mathrm{H}_{15}\left(\mathrm{C}_{7} \mathrm{H}_{5} \mathrm{O}\right) \mathrm{O}_{7}$. Produced by the action of dilute nitric scid on benzo-salicin. it is resolved by boiling with alkalies or acid into benroic acid, sallcyloI, and glucose.
bĕn-zō'- I e, a. [Eng. benzo(in); -ie.] Pertaining to benzoln, existing in benzoin.

benzoic acid,

Chemistry: $\mathrm{C}_{7} \mathrm{H}_{6} \mathrm{O}_{2}$ or $\mathrm{C}_{6} \mathrm{H}_{6} \mathrm{CO} .0 \mathrm{H}$. It is called slas phenylformic acid. It to obtained by oxidatlon of benzylic alcohol by aqueous chromicacid; by oxidation of benzoic aldehyde, methyl-benzene, de. ; from benzene by actiag oD its vapour by carbonyl chloride, which converts it into benzoyl chloride, and decompoaing this aubstance by water; by boiling hippuric acid with HCl ; or by besting the calclum salt of phthalic acld with lime. Benzole acid exiats io a large quantity in gum-benzoin, from which it ia obtalned by aublimation. Benzoic acid ia a mooobasic aromatic acdd; its salts are called benzoates, and sre soluble, except the basic ferric salt. Calcium benzoate by dry distillation is resolved into calcium carbonate and benzophenooe. But dry benzote acid distilled with excesa of quieklime is decomposed into carbonic dioxide and benzene. Beazoic acid has a slight amell when warmed: it melts at $121^{\circ}$, boils at $250^{\circ}$. It diasolves in it melts at $121^{\circ}$, boils at $250^{\circ}$. It diasolves in 200 parts of cold and in 25 parts of boiling 200 parts of cold and in 25 parts of boiling water, snd also in alcohol. It forms light, feathery, colourless crystals.

bcnzoio alcohol, s. [Benzyl Alcohol.]

benzoic aldelyde, s.

Chemistry: Bitter-almond oil, $\mathrm{C}_{7} \mathrm{H}_{6} \mathrm{O}$ or $\mathrm{C}_{8} \mathrm{H}_{5}$. CO.II. It is the aldehyde of benzyl alcohol, and is obtained by the oxidation of amygdalie with nitric acid; by digeating bitter slmoada and water for six hours at $30^{\circ}$ to $40^{\circ}$ : by the action of nascent hydrogen on chloride of benzoyl ; or by distilling a mixture of calclum benzoate and formate. Pure benzoic sldehyde is a thin colourleas Ilquid with a peculiar odour, ap. gr. 1.043 , and boils at $189^{\circ}$; dissolvea in tbirty parts of water, and mixes with alcohol and ether. Exposed to the air, it absorbs oxygen, and is converted into benzoic acid. It forms cryatalline compounds with alkaline biaulphites. Ammonia cyserta it into hydrobenzamae, a wite crystalline boly, which, when bouled

[Barlev, Barn, Faninaceous.] The name given in Scotland, end to a certain extent through the Empire, to Hordeum hexastichum, a cereal with gix rows of seeds on its spike, hence called six-rowed of seeds on its spike, hence called six-rowed barley. It is cultivated in the north of Scotbarley. It is cultivated in the north of scotland and Ireland, being valued for its hardy properties, and is used in malting, and for the manufacture of spirits. Bere is a coarser and less natritious graio than barley, but thrives in the poorest soil. It is also called bigg.

As bere-malt pays a less duty than barley malt, malsters sometimea attenipt to defraud the revenus by malting a mixture of bere and barley, and presenting it for assessment as bere-malt. This fraud can be detected by the microscope.

A. Transitive:
I. With a person or an animal for the objective:
t 1. Gen. : To deprive, rob, or apoil of anything.

The genersl gense of the word, though not yet extinet, was formerly much mors common than it is now
"There was never a prinet bereaved of his dependencles by his council, excopt there hath been on overeles by his council, except, there bath been grentress in one counsellor. "- Bacon: Estays.
2. Spec. : To deprive of relatives, as a persora does who causes the death or departure of any one, or as ia dona by Death itself personified.
" Aud Jaoob their father sald unto them, Me have ye berearad of my childrea."
If (a) Bereave in this sense is followed by the ohjective of the person deprived of any. thing, while the thing itself has before it of (aee examples uoder 1 aod 2 ); or (b) in poetry the of may be omitted:

Who this high gift of otrength committed to me ,

$\pi$ Crsbb thus distinguishes between the verhg to bereave, to deprive, and to strip:To bereave expresses more than deprive, but less than strip, which in thia sense is figurative, and denotes a total bereavement: one ia bereaved of children, defrived of pleasures, and stripped of property: we are bereaved of that on which we set most value. The act of bereaving does violence to our ioclinatina; wo are deprived of the ordinary comforts and conveoiences of life; they cease to be oura: we are stripped of the things which we moat want; we are thereby rendered as it were naked. Deprivations are preparstory to bereavements ; it we cannot bear tha ona patiently, ws may expect to aink uader the other. Common prudence ahould teach us to other. Common prudence should teach us to Christian faith ahould enabla us to consider Christian faith ahould enable us to consider every bereavement as a atep to perfection; maty be invested with those more exalted and lasting honours which await the faithful disciple of Christ.

I. Ordinary Lenguage:
(a) Of Anglo-Saxon origin: A prefix in msny old or, more precisely, Middle English words, which afterwards came to be gpelled with be; as bicome for become, or bifore, iiforn, biforen, for before.
(b) Of Latin origin: A preflx of which the oldest form was dui; as duidens for bidens. This brings it into close union with Lat. duo, Gr. $\delta v o$, $\delta v \omega(d u o)=$ two, and other cognate words. ['Two.] Similurly the oldest form of Lat. bis = twice, was duis; as, bellum of old was spelied duellum. $B i$ in composition signifies two or twice. It corresponds to $\delta \mathrm{c}(\mathrm{di})$ in Greek, and $d v i$ in Sanscrit.
II. Chem.: A preflx before words beginning with a consnnant, the form before those commencing with a vowel being bin.
(1) $B i$ or bin is sometimes used to denote that two atoms of chlorine, sulphur, or oxygen de., are united to an element, as bichloride of mercury, $\mathrm{HgCl}_{2}$; bisulphide of iron, $\mathrm{FeS}_{2}$ binoxide of tin, SnO ${ }_{2}$ Instead of bi, thic suffix $d i$ is now generally used; as carbon dioxide, $\mathrm{CO}_{2}$.
(2) Bi has alao been used to denote an acjd salt; that is, a salt in which only part of the hydrogen of the dibasic acid is replaced by a metal ; as, bicarbonate of sodimn, NaHCO (properly called hydric-8odic carbonste); bisulphate of potassium, $\mathrm{KHSO}_{4}$ (hydric potassic sulphate). These terms are now only used in commerce and pharmacy.

2. Spec. : Pre-emineatly "the book," in comparison with which other literary productions are not worthy to be dignified with the name of booke; or, if they be called books, it then becomes "the Book of books." The idea just expressed is funnded on the etymology derived originally from the Christian Greeks, but now rooted in the languages of all the nations of Christendom. The first to use the term $\beta \iota \beta \lambda i a$ (biblia) in this sense is aaid to have Leen Chrysostom, whe flourished in the fifth centary. The word scripture or scriptures, from the Latin scriptura $=$ writing, scripture $=$ writings, conveys the analogons idea ture $=$ writings, convers the malogons idea that the "Scriptures" sre alone worthy of that the "Scriptures" " 8re alone worthy of being called writings. This nse of the woud being called writilggs. This nse of the word cance originally from the Latin fathers, but it has been adopted not inerely by the English, but ly the other Christian uations of Europe. The high appreciation of the Bible implied in the use of these words arises from the fact that it is telieved ly the vast majority of Christians to be (with allowances for minute diversitics of reading and errors of translation) the actual Word of God, and therefore infallibly true. This is implied, though not expressly stated, in the sixth of the Thirty-nine Articles.

The Chnrch of Rome does not differ from the several Proteatant denominations reapecting the divine authority of the books which the latter accept as canonical ; it combines, however, with them the spocrypha and church traditions regarding faith and morsls which Protestanta reject.

Articles of Faith and symbolical books do not always express the real belief of all whe nominally essent to them; and scattered through the beveral chrurches are a very larg number of persons who hold that the Bible contains a revalation from God, tretead of being of itself "the Word of God;" whilst a omall pumber deny the scriptures all epecia inspiration, and deal with them as freely as they would with the Mohammedan Koran, the Hiadoo Vedas and Puranas, the Sikh Grunth or the Persian Zend A vesta.
The Bible consists of aixty-six books, constituting an organic whole.

In the autherised Engligh Version the Bible Is divided into the Old and New Teatamenta, the former containing thirty-nine, and the latter twenty-seven books. These degignations are taken from antiquum testamentum, in the Vulgate rendering of 2 Cor. iit. 14 and novum testamentum in verse 6. The Greek word is 8،aO restament being H manala scä̀̀кп (Hè palaia diatheke $=$ the Old Diatheke), and the Greek (Hè kainé diathèke = the New Diatheke). Bia Oriкn (Diathekek) in Class. Greek, and in Heh. ix. 16, 17, algnifies a testament or will, hut generally, throughout the Septuagint, the Greek Testament, and the Greek ecclesiastical writers, it mesus a covenant. Hence the two primary divigions of the Bible had better have primary divigions of the Bible had better have been called the Ok and New Covenasts rather than the Odd and New Testaments. The old covenent is the one made with Adam or that entered into with Abraham and aubsequently developed at Sinai; the new one that formed in conaection with the advent and desth of Christ.
The Old Textament was ariginally written in Hebrew, except Jer. $x .11$; Ezra iv. 8 to vi. 18 ; vii. 12 to 26 ; aud Dan. ii. from middle of verse 4 to vii. 28, which are East Arameean (Chaldee). The New Testament was originally written in Greek, with the exception perhaps of St. Matthew's Gospel, which the Christian fathers Paplas, Irenæus, Pantænne, Origen originally in Aramæan.
The order of the books in the Hebrew Bible is different from that which obtains in the English Scriptures, which in this respect follow the Greek Septuagiut and the Latin Vulgate. The Jews divided the Old Testament primarily into three portions, called the Law, the Prophets, and the Kethuhim or in Greek the Hagiographa. The Divine Redeemer alludes to this classification in Luke xxiv. 4 $\because$. . . that all things night be fulfilled which are written in the Law, and in the Prophets and in the Psalms." The Psalms are the first book in the Hagiographa, and agreealuly to the Jewish method of quoting, stand for the whole division. Such words as Genesis, Exodus, Deu teronomy, \&e, are Greck, and taken from the Scptuagint; the IIcbrew gencrally mames theso and some other books hy their initial word. Thus Genesis is called תיטvin (Berestith) $=$ lin the begiming. The following list exhilhite the order and classification of the books in the Helrew Bible :-
L. דֶin (Torah), the Law: Genesig, Exodns, Leviticns, Nunbers, and Deuteronomy.
II. E'v̌M (Nehíim), the Prophets:
(1) The former prophets: Joshna, Judges, Samnel, Kings.
(2) The later prophets:
(a) The great prophets: Isaiah, Jeremiah Ezekiel.
(b) The small or minor prophets: Hosea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Joush, Micah, Nahum, Ilabakknk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zeeharish Malsehi.
LII. (Kethubim) = books; in Greek Hagiographa = Holy Writings:
(1) Truth: Psalins, Proverbs.
(2) The five rolls: Job, Song of Solomon Rnth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther, Daniel, Eara, Nehemiah, Chronicles
It is startling to find that in this arrangemant Daniel does not figure among the prophets bnt is relegated to the Hagiographa It is remarkable also that Joshna, Judges, Samuel, and Kings are classiffed not as historie, but as prophetic writinga.
A convenient clausification for modern use divides the Old Testament books into threa classes :-
(1) The Historical Books: Geneais-EIria

(2) The Poetical Books: Job-Song of Solomon.
(3) The Prophetical Books: Isaiah-Malachi (The weak puint about this division is that most of the prophetical books falling under the third category were written not in Hebrew prose but in poetry.)
A aimilar division for the New Testament is into-
(1) Historical Books: Matthew-The Acta of the A postles.
(2) Epistles: Romans-Jude.
(3) The Prophetical Book: Revelation. [Fora description of the several booka, see Genesis, Exoous, &e.
The Bible has given rise to aeveral sciences of its own, and apecially to the following:-
(1) Apologetics, not a good name, for it la Mable to be misunderstood, as it was even by George 111., who, on being told that Bishop Wataon had published "an apology for the Bible," remarked that he did not betore know that the Bible required an apology. The word is used in the Greek aesae of defence, the Christian apologist does not admit the exist ence of error in the Bible which ha defends. [Apologetics, Apolooy.]
(2) Biblical Criticim, which seeka to ascer tain preciaely what books are inspired, and briag the text of these to the most perfect state of purity. [Biblical Caiticism.]
(3) Hermeneutics, from the Gr. épunveutixós (hermēneutikos) = of or for interpreting: ita aim is to ascertain the principles which anould be followed in biblical interpretation. [Hermenrutics.]

The firat Bible society inatituted in the United States was that of Philadelphia in 1808. It was followed in May, 1809, by the Connecticut Bible Society at Hartford; in July, 1809, by the Massachu setta Bible Society, at Boston; in November, 1809, by the New York Bible Soclety, at New York; and in December of the aame year by the New Jeraey Bibla Soclety, at Princeton. By 1816 between 50 and 60 of auch local societica had been formed, with no lond of noion layond the fsct that they were al davoted to the publication of the same book The need of a national institution was by this time atrongly felt, and in 1816 a convention of repreaentativea of Bible Societica was held in New York, which orgsnized the American Bibla Society, an institution which was incor porated in 1841, twenty-five yeara later, and has had a career of usefuluess only aecond to that of ita Britiah predecessor.

As regarda the work done by these societie it hay be remarked that the British and Foreign Bible society has distributed aince it formation conaiderably more than $100,000,000$ Bibles, and that it has, in Britaln and the colonies, between 5000 and 6000 auxiliary and branch societies. The American Bible Society has fully 7000 auxiliary societies, in al parta of the United Statea, fanuea annually alout $1,50,000$ Biblea, New Testaments and other yarts of Scripture, and has diatributed in all about $35,000,000$ copies. Its income is over $$ 500,000$ per annunu. Thia Society has promoted the tranalation of the pible, in whole or in part, into $8: 3$ lsnguages and dialects, includ ing those of the ruost populous non-Christian countries, as China, Japan, Turkey, Arabia Persis, and Egypt. The Britiah Society has had translationa made into 226 languagea and dialects, the Bible being now printed in the Isnguages of 800,000, mo of the human race other Americall mocieties embrace As8ociation of Friends in America, org Bibl Soclety, organized in 1836, end the American Bible Unlon, organized in 1850.
3. German Bible Societies: The first asbocia tion ever formed for the bole purpuse of providing copiea of the Scriptures for those who were destitute of them, was founded a Halle in Germany, ia 1710 , by baron Hilde brand von Canstein. This institution down to 1834, when other Bible Societles had become engaged in the same work in that country, had dintributed over 2,750,410 copies of the Biblo and about $2,000,000$ copies of the New Testament. Of the existing numerous Bible Societies of the country, the Prussian Central Bible Society, founded in 1814 in Berlin, is the mont important. It has banches in all parts of the country, and distributea about 80,000 biblec and Testaments yearly. The britieh and Forejgn Bibla Society aupplies Germany with great quastitiea of libles, numbering over 350,060 annually. Bible socicties were pru hibited hy the Austrian government in 1817 .
Bible aocietiea, though wide in their conatitution, are practically Protestant inatitu tions; and on June 29, 1816, a hall denouncine them was launched by Pope Pius V11.

blblical oriticism. The ecience which has for ita objects (1) to decide which books are entitled to have a place in the Scripture canon [CAnon]; and (2) to bring the text of these canonlcal hooka to the utmost possible degree of purity.

In proaecuting the firat of these eims, the Biblioal critic muat not be confuunded with the Christian apologiat: the function of the former ia a atrictly judicial one, whilat office of the latter is that of an advocate.
One important aubject of inveatigation in as to what Old Testament booka were recogniaed as divine by the ancient Jewish Church or eynagogue ; am also what New Testament booke were at once and universally welcomed by the early Christian Church [Homologoumena] ; and what othera were for a time partially rejected, thongh they ultimately found acceptance everywhere. [ANTILeoomena.]

In aeeking to purify the text the billical critic must do much toilaome work in the collation of "codices" or manuscripts. [Conex.] He does sot put the whole of these on one level and admit whatever reading has a majority of MSS. in its favour; but attempts to test the value of each one aplart, forming an hypotheaia if he can as to when, where, and hypotheaia if he can as and from, what otber from whom it emanated, it was copied at first, or, in technical Mss. it was copied at irrst, or, in belonged. [Recension.] Those which he valuee most for New Testament criticism are the Coder Sinaiticus, written probably ahout the middle of the fourth century; and the codex Alexandrinus and Codex Vaticanus, dating, it is believed, from about the middle of the fifth century.

Subjeined is a list of a few of the chief passagee in the New Teatament on which $9-26$; John v. 4 ; viii. $1-11$; Acta viii. 97 ; 1 John $\mathbf{v}$. 7 , and nerhaps the doxology eppended to the Lord'a Prayer, "For thine is the kingdoin," \&c. bǐ-car'-bŏn-āte, 3. [In. Fr. bicarbonate; Ger. bikarbonat. From Lat. preex bi =two, and Eng. carbonate.]
Chem. \& Fhar.: A name given to the acd carbonates of potassium, sodium, \&c., or to hydric solium carbouate ( $\mathrm{NallCO} \mathrm{O}_{3}$ ), hydrie potassium carbonato $\left(\mathrm{KIICO}_{3}\right)$, \&c. Also to a carbonate dissolved in water containing carbonic acid gas, as carbonate of calclum thus dissolved, reprecipitated nn boiling. Bicarbonate of potassinm, $\mathrm{KHCO}_{3}$, is olitained by passing $\mathrm{CO}_{2}$ gas through a saturated aqueous passing $\mathrm{CO}_{2}$ gas through a sabuated aqueong solution of $\mathrm{K}_{2} \mathrm{CO}_{3}$ (potassinm carbonate). It crystalises in colourless rhomble non-deliquescent crystals, which are soluble in four tinies their weight of water. it does ant give tinies their weight of water. It does ant give a precipitate with $\mathrm{BaCl}_{2}$ in the cold. Bicara precipitate witb $\mathrm{BaCl}_{2}$ in the cold. Bicarbonate of potassimm is a direst sntacid, and bonate of potassium is a direst antacid, and is employed in the treatment of acute rheuIs employed in the treatment of acute rheumatism, and for renoving uric acid from the aystem.
bicarbonate of sodium, $\mathrm{NaHCO}_{3}$, hydrogen sodium carbonate, obtained by exposing carbonate of sodium to the action of $\mathrm{CO}_{2}$, carbonic acid gas, which is liberated from limestone by hydrochloric acid ; the gas is absorbed by the crystals af the $\mathrm{Na}_{2} \mathrm{CO}_{3.10} \mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{O}$, which lose their water of crystallisation and become opaque. Bicarbonate of aodiom is osed as an antacid: it is suppossd to influence the secretions of the liver, snd not to produce nausea like the potassium salt. It is ased in the manafacture of efferveacing porders and drinks, which are usually a mixtare of this salt with tartaric acid, and also enters into the composition of baking-powders.

"Byddynge or praynge: Oraclo . . ."-Promgt. Paro - Bidding prayer

Eccles. : An expression used in pre-Reformation times in the aenas of "praying prayers," i.e., praying. In the tnedieval church the prieat was accustomed to read ont a list of persona and things for which the prayers of the faithful were requested. In England, in the sixteenth century, this list was replaced by a form aetting forth the aubjecta to be remembered by the people when bidding thair beada (that la, saying tha rosary, in other beads (that ia, saying tha rosary, in othor words, saying their prsyara, or praying). Wrards, saying their priyara, or praying). When the two verbs $[B i o(1)$, Bid (2)] were popularly confounded the uriginal meaning of populary confounded the uriginal meaning of taken as an adjective = that enjuina or commands. Bidding prayer then cane to mean "an exhortation to iutercessory piayer," and is ao used by aome Roman writers (cl. Rock: Church of Our Fathers, il. 354). In the Eng: lish Church tha bidding prayer is an invita tion to the people to pray for the Royal Fantily, Parliament, \&c. big'-ott, s. \& a. [In Dan. $\dagger$ blgot (s.); Ger. bigott (a.) ; Fr. bigot (the modern sense of the word not arising till the fifteenth century); Low Lat. bigoti, pl. A word for which a supperflnity of etyinolngies have been given. It is deeply rooted only in the English and Freach tongues. Barbazan, Malone, and Michel conaider it a corrupition of the word $V$ isigoth, which might become Visigot, Bisigot, Bigot, a view which Littré thinks prosigot, Bigot, a view which Littre thinks probshle. According to an old chronicle quoted by Du Cange, Rollo, the first Duke of Normandy, being required to kiss the foot of King Charlea, as having received Neustria in fief, contemptuously replied, "Ne se Bigot" = Not so, by God. Hence the king and court nicknamed him Bigoth. Llttre, however, thinks it probable thist this story was invented to explain the word. Wace, as quoted by Dn Cange, ssys that the French called the NorCange, ssys that the French called the Normans bigoz or bigos. Cotgrave affirms that mang bigoz or bigos. Cotgrave affirms that Bullokar (ed. 1656) thus defineo it : "Btgot, an hypocrite; also a scrupulous or supersti. tious person. The word came into England out of Normandy, where it continnee to this day in that sease." Trench derives the word droin Sp. bigote. a mustachio, and supposes that the people of that nation, wearing on their lips the hiraute appendsgea now apoken of, while the other nstions of Europe had smooth faces, came to be called bigots, that is, men of the mustachio. Standing afterwards as the type of religious intolerance, they so degraded the word bigot that it came to have its present meaning. (Trench, on the Study of Words, 2nd ed., pp. 80-82.) A number of authora derive bigot from the Franciscan ter tiaries called Begutte, Bigutte, Beguince, Beguins, or in ltal. Bizochi, the latter-named word peing from bigio $=$ russet-grey, brown which weing tham color of the hablit thay wore. To this view Wedgwood assents, while Skeat considera that Wace's statement given above insidera that Wace's statement given above indicates the correct etymology. He believes bigoz or bigos to be of Scandinavian origin, though its modern signification has come from its application to the Beguine or Begutte.] [Beguls, Bequtte]

Binary theory:

Chem. : A hypothesis proposed hy Dary to reduce the haloid salta (as NaCl) and the oxygen salta (as $\mathrm{NaNO}_{3}$ ) to the sama typo, the monad $\mathrm{Cl}^{\prime}$ being replaced by the monad radical containing oxygen ( $\left.\mathrm{NO}_{3}\right)^{\prime}$. Aclds are hy. containing oxygen $\left(\mathrm{NO}_{3}\right)^{\prime}$. $A$ elds are hydrogen salts, as HCl , or $1 \mathrm{I}\left(\mathrm{NO}_{3}\right)^{\prime}$. A radical is only part of a molecule which can unite with is only part of a molecule which can unite with or replace sa element or anothar radical, atomicity for atomicity. Thus the dyad radical $\left(\mathrm{SO}_{4}\right)^{\prime}$ can replaca two monad radicals, $\left(\mathrm{NO}_{3}\right)_{2}^{\prime}$ as in the equation $\mathrm{Pb}^{\prime \prime}\left(\mathrm{NO}_{3}\right)_{2}+$ $\mathrm{Mg}^{\prime \prime}\left(\mathrm{SO}_{4}\right)^{\prime \prime}=\mathrm{Ph}^{\prime \prime}\left(\mathrm{SO}_{4}\right)^{\prime \prime}+\mathrm{Mg}^{\prime \prime}\left(\mathrm{NO}_{3}\right)_{2}^{\prime}{ }_{4}$ radical cannot exist in a separate state. II (a) Crabb thus distinguiahes the verbs to bind snd to tie:- "Binding is performed by clrcumvolution round a body ; tying, by involution within itself. Some bodies ara bound without being lied; others are tied withont being bound; \& wounded leg is bound but not tied; s string is tied but not bound; a riband may sometimes be bound round the head, and tied under the chin. Binding therefore serves to keep several things in a compact form together; tying masy serve to prevent one single body separating from another; s criminsi la bound hand snd foot; he is tied to a atake." "Binding sad tying likewise differ in degree ; binding serves tu produce adhesion in sil the parts of a body ; tying only to produce contact in a single part." Similarly, in the figurative uss of the terms, a "bond of union is applicahle to a large body with inasy comproent parts ; s tie of sffection marks an adheston between individusl minds."
(b) To bind, to oblige, sad to engage ars thus discriminated:-"Bind is mora forcible and coercive that oblige; oblige than engage. We are bound by so oath, obliged by circumstances, and engaged by promisea. Conscieacs binds, prudence or necesaity oblige, honour and principls engage. A parent is bound no less by the law of his conscience, than by those of the community to which he belongs, to provide for his helpless offspriag. Politeness obliges men of the world to preserve a frieadiy exterior towsids those for whom they have no regsid. When we are engaged in tha service of our king snd country, we cannot shrink from our duty without exposing ourdebtor is bound to pay by virtue of s written iostrument in law; hs is obliged to pay in consequence of the importunate demsuds of the creditor; he is engaged to pay in coosequence of a promise given. A bond is the strictest deed in law; sn obligation biods under pain of a pecuniary loss; sn engagement is mostly verbal, and rests entirely on the rectitude of the parties." (Crabb: English Synon.)

It is supposed to be fuller than memoirs, which simply record the more memorsble scenes in his histary: The word biography is quite recent. As Trench shows, it came intn the language first as biographia. This latter term, though it looks Greek, or Latin horrowed from Greek, is really in neither tongue, thaugh it occurs in Pertuguese, and anslogaus words exist in French, Italinn, and Spanish. [See etym.] Though the term biography ia modern, the kind of literature which it describes is ancient. Is the book of Genesis there are biographies, or st least memoirs, of Adam, Norh, Abraham, Isane, Jacob, Joseph, and others. Homer's "Odyssey" may be conaidered to be an extended biography of Ulysses, himited, however, to the most interesting period of his life-that of his wanteresting period of his life-that of his wanderings. Though the " lliad " m8y be loosely accurately, it is a chapter from the biogranhy of Achilles, describing calamities brought apon ths Greeka by the revenge which he took on Aganemnon for carrying off his demsla captive Briseis. The most elaborate wacient Greek biegraphy was Plutarch's Parallel Lizes, Bion Mapádindoc (Biai Paralzloi), consisting of forty-six memoirs of Greek, Roman, and other celebrities; it was pubislied about A.D. 80. In B.C. 44, Cornelius Nepos had ant forth a biographical work is ite Imperatorum, Lives of Commanders, In more modern tímea very extended biographies hsve been attempted. Thus France has its Biographie Universelle in fifty-two volumes, published hetween 1810 snd 1828, and England, among other works, possesses ts Biographia Britannica (ive volumes) (174T1766), ita English General Biographical Dictisnary, eleven volumes (1762), and Chalmers's Biographical Dictionary, thirty-two volunes ( $181^{\prime \prime}-1817$ ), sad the great Dictionary of National Biography (commenced in 3885 , sud plansed to make fifty volumes.

One branch of biography is autobiogrephy, in whieh a person gives his own life or me moirs. Cresar"s Commentaries ia most valuble example of this kind of writing.
Biography is properly a department of history which, as Macanlay ebows, ahould be a biatory not solely of kinga or similar peraonages, but of the people also over whom they rule. The more prominent a person has been the more nearly does his biography become identical with history in the ordinary sense. A life or memoir of Martin Luther, Napoleon 1 . or the first Duks of Weilington is in essentisl particulars history, sud that not of a essentisl particulars history, sud thst not or a solitary na the world.

I. Zool.: The English designation of the Aves, the second class of the sub-kingdou Vertebrata, standing between the Mammalia (Manmals) above, and the Reptilia (Reptiles) below. Whilst in their warm blood they are pore closely skin to the former than to the latter, they spproach the latter rather than the former in various points of anstomical structure, especially in their lower limbs, [Ornithoscelida.] They agree also with Reptiles, Amphibia, and Fishes in being oviparous, whilst the Mammalis bring forth their young alive and suckle them for a thase. Birds are feathered bipeds, with wings used by all but a few aberrant speeies for flight. wo fachitate the luogs permeate the larger luoces, and with the lungs permeate the larger loces, and even the huge bills of the hornbill, toucan, &c., the effect being greatly to diminish their weight. 'The circulation is rapid, the blood warmer than io other vertebrates, and the ebergy, consequently, great. A bird consists of a head, a body, snd limbs, the latter term including the lega, tail, and wings. la the Bubjoined figure-

Linaxus divided Birds into six orders, Aceipitres, Pice, Anseres, Gralle, Gallinæ, and Passeres, All of these, exceln Picte, are still retained under different names. Cnvier, in 1817, recognised six ordera, Accjpitres, Passeres, Scansores, Gallinæ, Grallæ, and Palmipedes. Vigors, in 1825 , adopted the quinsry arrangement into Raptores, Insessores, Raaores, Grallstores, and Natatores. Owen, in 1866, made seven orders : Natatores, Grallatorea, Rasores, Cantstores, Volitores, snd Raptores: and Hoxley, in 1864, separated Birds into Sanrururx, containing only the Ostrich and its sllies ; and tho Carinstas compreheoding all ordinary birds. Dallas (following Vogt's srrangement of 1851) divided Birds into two sections, the Antophagi, in which the young birds are capable of feeding Which the young bircs are capable of feeding themselves from the moment of leaving the cgg, and the Invessores, In which the young remontn in the nest till they ary compietely Hederd in the nest till they are completely Hedged, former section contains four orders, tatorea (Swimmers), the Grallatores (Wadifg Blrds), the Curnores (Runners), and the Rasores (Galliasceque Blrde). The Insessorisi section aleo contains four orders, the Columbe (Pigeons), the Seansores (Climbing Birds), the Passeres (Perchers), and the Raptores (Bird of Prey). In A.D. 1711, Ray estimated the birds known and described at "near 500 .*
In 1835 , Mr. Swainson conjectared that the opecies, known and unknown, might be aboai 6,800 . There are more than 10,000 species of birds, sonie confiued to narrow localities, other widely distributed. Of these, a considerable propurtion belong to the United States, either as snmoner visitors or as yearly residents

2. Palownt.: In certain triassic atrata in Connecticut there ars ornithichnites," or fossil footprints like those which birds would leave upou the mud or fine sand over which they walked. [Footrainta, OnNithichnite.] The number of joiats in esch of the three toes Is prectsely the esme as in modern birds, notwithstanding which some think the imprints msy be those of Deinossurian reptales, of which reblains have been found in the same atrstum. The oldest bird, of which the actual feathered ekeleton has beew oltained, comes from the lithographic slate of upper oolitic age, quarried at Solenhofen in Bavaria: it is the Archaropteryx of Owen (q.v.). Three apecimens of it are known at jresent: one in Bavaria, the second ia the British Musenm of. Nstural Mistory, South Kensington, whilst the third is in the Berlin University Buseon, for which it was purchased from Herr Hablyerlein for 80,000 marks, or about $£ 4,000$. This last epecimen of Archeopteryx has been examined by Professor Carl Vogt, who considers that it is neither bird nor reptile, but eomething intermediate lietween the two; or, to be more specific, that while a bird in its integument and hinder limbs, it is a repitle in sll the rest of its organisation. Bones like those of bircls exist in the Wealden; opinion has much wavered as to whether they were true birds or flying reptiles [Prerodactitl; there is, however, what appears to be a genuine bird in the Greensand. Prof. Miarsh found io the Cretsceons rocke of America two reinarkable genera of birds: the Hesperornis and the lehthyornie, the fornor furornis and the jenthyornis, the formor furnished with true teeth in a groove, and the latter having them lodged in sockets. In these respects they approsch reptiles, besidea Whieh the lehthyornis, like reptiles, has its vertebre concave at each ead. of tertiary hirds Owen, in 1846, established four opecies from the London clay, described from four or five fragonents of bones and skulls found in that eocene deposit. These icclude a vulture, a kingfisher, and an ostrich. Bones of birds in the Paris gypsum and the lacustrine lime stone of the Limagne d'Auvergne, both freshwater strsta of eocene age. From the miocene beds of France have been ohtained about seventy apecies, among others, parrots, tragons, geventy apecies, among others, parrots, tragons, flamingoes, secretary birds, gnd marabout flamingoes, segretary birds, and marabout storks, suggesting the present fanns of South storks, suggesting the present fanns of South Africa. There are birds in the miocene of the Africa. There are birds in the miocene of the Sewalik hills in lidia. Uf post-tertiary specles the finest, and also the best known, are the gigantic Moas frotn New Zealand, which seem to lave been contemprorary with $10 a n$, though now tbey are extioct. The set more massive Apyornis, the eggs of which are more than thirteen inches in dianeter, snd equal in capacity to 148 hens" eggs, is found in gurface deposits in Madigascar. Thus few fobsil birde are known, and those fow are mostly from the tertiary or post-tertiary rocks.

1. Gen.: Thin flour-eake which has been haked in the oven nutil it is highly dried There are many kinds of litecuits, but the lasia of all is flour mixed with water or milk. In fancy biscuits sugar, butter, and flavouring ingrediente are used. Plain liacuits are more nutritious than an equal weight of bread, but owing to their hardmess and drynesa, they should be more thoroughly masticated to ensure their easy digestion. When exposed to moisture, biseuits are apt to lose their brittlsness and become mouldy, hence it is necessary to keep them in a dry atnosphere. Digestive biscuits consist nlmost entirely of bran, Charbiscuits eonsist almost entirely of brant, Charcoal biscuits eontain about ten per eent, of powdered vegetable ehareoal. Ment inamita, which are said to be very nutritioua, contain either extract of meat, or lean meat which has been dried and ground to a fine powder. Ground roasted biseuits are sometimes used to adulterate colfee.

There was a plurality of auch officers in that at Philippl, thelr associatea in government beting deacone, while the "aalnts," or ordinary Cbristiall members, are mantioned before both (Phil. 1. 1). The same officers in the church ist Miletus, termed in our version of the N. T. "overseers," are identical with the "elders" of the sama ecclesiastical commnnity. [Bea etymology.] "And from Niletus ha sent to Ephesus and called the elders [ $\pi \rho \in \sigma \beta v=$ repous (presbuterous)] of the Church, add. said, . . Take heed, thercfore, unto yourselves; and to all the flock over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you [emaoxomovs (episkopous)] overseers." Or the word might have been reodered, as ia other places, "bishopa." The term $\pi \rho \epsilon \sigma \beta v \tau \epsilon \rho o s$ (presbuteros) was borrowed from the synagogue [Eldea, PrebayTER]; atymologically it lmplied that, as s rula, the person so designated was pretty well advanced in life, whilst emioкотоs (episkopos), borrowed from the polity of the Greeian States, pointed to the duty incumbent on him of overseeing the church. The qualifications of a New Testament bishop are given at length by St. Paul ( 1 Tim. iii. 1-7; Titua 1. 7-9), the only other Christisn functionary meno tioned with him being still the deacon ( $\mathbf{1}$ Tim. jii. 8-13.)

1L. Church IIistory :

1. Post-opostolic period: A church funetion. ary superior to, and ruling over, the eldera or presbyters. Parity amoug a body of men may exist theorefieally, but it cannot in practice be realised. At the deliberations held by the presbyters of Philippi, of Miletns, or other Christian churches, in all probability one of their number was voted into tha ehair. Times of persecution bring the atrongest to the front, and that atrong man would, at nearly every crisis, preside over his fellows. He would become their natural leader, and after a time their actmal ruler. A distinetive appellation was required to discriminate him from his colleagues, and gradmally he monopolised the term éríккотог ( (episkopos) = overseer or bishop, leaving the hnmbler designation of $\pi$ peçúrepol ( $p$ resbuteroi ) $=$ presbyters or clders, to his former equals. Such evangelists as Timothy and Titua also axereised functions in many respects identicsl with those of an episcopate ( Tim. $1.3 ;$ iil. $1 ; v$. 17, 19, 20, 22 ; 2 Tim. i. 6 ; ii. 2,14 ; iv. 2 , 5 ; Titus i. $5-13$; ii. 15.) Finally, the yastor of a ehurch which hada series of villaga churches to which it hal given birth aronod it, would naturally lecome overseer of those in charge of these smaller eongrigations. All these influences tended in favour of episcopany, which Dr. Lightfoot, late Bishop of Durhan, believes to have arisen first in tha Jewigh Churehes, whence between 70 and 100 A.D. it spread to those of Gentile origin, while an ioquirer of a totally different achool of thought dates the change between 120 and 130 . In the writinga of Clement, one of the "A postolla Fathers," the presbyter and bishop are still the same. Polyeary and hernas speak less decidedly. Ignatius was once stndded with passages extolling the episeopate. Most of these have aince been discovered to be interpolations, and even the few that remain are not free from suspicion. Omitting various Christian fathers, and proceeding at once to the aiddle of the third century, the writings of Cyprian, who filled the aee of Carthage from A.D. 248 to 258 , are full of pasazges exalting the biahop high over the presbyter, the position claimed for the former being that of auccessor of tha apostles. The viewe of

Cyprian became those of the church in general. [For further deve

2. The diaccse or see of a bisliep, the territory over which the jurisdiction of a bishep extends. Many of the English bishoprics date back to Anglo.Saxon times. Besides the two Arehbishoprics of Canterbury and Fork, the following thirteen Eoglish sees were in exist ence prior to the Norman Conquest: London Winclicster, Chichester, Rochester, Salisbury, Bath and Wclls, Excter, Woreester, Hereford Coventry and Lichfield, Lincoln, Norwich ant Durham. So were the Bishopric of Mam (comlined with that of Sodrr, from Sudoreys = llel rides, about 1113) and the Welsh sees of st. Davids (once an archbishopric), Bangor, St. Asaph, and Llandaff. Since then the following English sees have been created : Ely (A.D. 1109 , (1541) Glous), Oxford (1541), Pcterbarong (1041), Gloucester (1541), Mristol (1541), livivon (1836), Manchester (1838), St. Albans and Truro (1877), and Liveruool (1880). Of ald the English sees London, Durham, and Winchester are held to rank highest, and their occu pants lave always seats in the Honke of Lords. The Bishop of sotlor and Man, the lowest in point of dignity, never has thi privilege; ner do the four bishops who are juniors in peint of standing possess it, only iwenty-four lishops heing entitled to sit a one time in the Upper House, and there being in England twenty-nine sees. In the Church of Ireland, besidea twa archbishop-rics, there are ten hishoprica. In the Scottist Episcopal Church there are oeven. Connected with the Church of England in the colonies, including India, there are oixty gees, besides at least eight in fonelgu parts. Within the Britiah Islaads, the Reman Catholic Church counts thirteen biahoprics in England, four in Scotland, and twenty-four in Ireland. In the United Statea there are aixiy-eight bishope of the Protestant Episcopal and twenty-eight of the Methodiat Epiacopal Churches. The Roman Cathelic Church has a cardinal, thirteen archbiahops aod saventy-threa brahops.

bis'-mŭth, s. [In Dan., Fr... & Port. bismuth; Sw. & Ital. bismutte; Mod. Lat. bismuthum, vismuthum; Ger. wissmuth. Ultimate etym. uuknown.]

1. Chem.: A triad metallic element, rarely pentad At. Wt.210.Symb. Bi'". Bismuth occurs native along with quartz, and is semarated by fusion; it is dissolved in nitric acid, and a large quantity of water addel, which precipitates basic bismuth nitrate ; this is fused with pure charcoal, which reduces it to the metallie state. Bismuth is a crystallinc, hard, brittle, diamagnetie, reddish-white metal, sp). gr. 9.9 , melting at $264^{\circ}{ }^{\circ}$., and expanding on oxilises into Bi'"O prmanent in the air, with a biue flame. Powderod bismuth tikes fire in chlorine gas forming BiCl ${ }_{3}$. Bismuth is easily dissolved by nitric acid ; hydrochloric acid has little action on it. Boiling sulphoric acid oxidises it with liberation of so $\mathrm{SO}_{2}$. Bis. muth is usied to make fusibic netal, an alloy math is used to make fusibie metal, an alloy of two parts bismuth, one of leati, and one of tin : it melts at $93^{\circ} \mathrm{C}$. Bismuth forms a dioxide $\mathrm{Bi}^{\prime \prime}{ }^{2} \mathrm{O}_{2}$, ${ }^{\mathrm{B}}$ trioxide $\mathrm{Bi}^{\prime \prime}{ }^{\prime} \mathrm{O}_{3}$, and a nentoxide $\mathrm{Bi}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$. The so-called tetroxide $\mathrm{Bi}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{4}$ is said to be a compound of the last two oxides. Bismuth forms one chloride $\mathrm{Bi}^{\prime \prime \prime} \mathrm{Cl}_{3}$ bismutherus chloride (q.v.). Bismuth salts are precipitatel by $\mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$ from an acid solution (see Analusis). They may be separated from the other metals of that group thus: the precipitate of sulphides is washed, and then treated with ( $\mathbf{N H}_{4}$ ) HS ammonium sinphide, whigh dissolves the sulphides of arsenic, antimony sud tin; the reaidue is washed, and then boiled with nitric acid, whlch dissoives all the sulphides except mer curic sulphide Hgs. The solution is then evaporated with sulphurio acid, the lead, If any, separates ont as $\mathrm{PbSO}_{4}$, then ammonis $\mathrm{NH}_{3} . \mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{O}$ is added in excess, Which precipl tates the oismuin as $\mathrm{Bi}(\mathrm{OH}) 3$; the copper and cadmium are in the solution. The salts o biamuth give \& whits precipitate with water if $\mathrm{NH}_{3} \mathrm{HCl}$ smmonis chloride is firat added to convert them Into bismuth chloride, and they give \& yellaw precipitate with $\mathrm{K}_{2} \mathrm{CrO}_{4}$, whici is insoluble in KHO, but soluble in nitrioscid. They are reduced on charcoal by the blowpipeflame, yleiding a brittle metalle bead, and give s alight yellow incrustation of oxide.
2. Mir. Bismuth, Native Bismuth: A sectlle and brittle mineral occurring in hexagona crystals, or reticulated, arborescent, foliated or granular. The hardness is $2 \cdot 25$; the $s p$ gr., 9727 ; the lustre metallic, the atrask and colour of a specimen silvery-white with s reddish tinge. Composition, bismuth $99 \cdot 914$ with traces of tallurium and iron. It occurs with other metals, in veins in gneiss, clay-alate, and other metamorphic rocks. It has been found in eeveral counties of England, in the silver and cobalt minea of Saxony, in Bohemia, in Norway, Sweden, and in Virginia, North and South Carolna, California, and e日veral other of our Western Statea.
3. Pharm : Subnitrate of Bismuth, Carbon ate of Bismisth, and Oxide of Bismuith taken internally act as sedatives on the stomach in dyspepsia and chronic vomiting. They have been also used in epilepsy and in the disr rhea attending phthisis. Preparations of bismuth are sometimes employed externally as cosmetics, but when s suiphuretted gas acts upon them they blacken the face.

Chem.: Bismuthic Oxide, called also Bismuthic Anhydride, Bismuth Pentoxide $\mathrm{Bi}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$. It is prepared by pasaing chlorine through a solution of potash holding Bi"" $0^{\circ} \mathrm{O}_{3}$ in susprension; the red precipitate is digested with atrong nitric acid to remove any $\mathrm{Bi}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$. The bright red jowder is bismuthic acid II $\mathrm{BiO}_{3}$; this when heated to $120^{\circ} \mathrm{C}$ is converted into $\mathrm{Bl}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$, which is a dull red powder: when atrongly heated it gives off oxygen, and forms bismuth tetroxide or bismuthons bismuthite $\mathrm{Bi}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3} \mathrm{Bi}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$.

bismuthous chloride.

Chem.: $\mathrm{Bi}^{\prime \prime \prime} \mathrm{Cl}_{3}$, also called Trichloride of Bismuth. It is obtained by heating bismuth in chlorine gas, or by distilling the metal with twice its weight of mercuric chioride ( $\mathrm{HgCl}_{2}$ ) It ia a white hygroscopic substance, meiting at $230^{\circ}$ and distilling at a higher teimperature It is soluble in dilute HCl , and by the addition of water becomes turbid, $\mathrm{Bi}{ }^{\prime \prime \prime} \mathrm{OCl}$, a whita powder being formed, which is used as a pig ment called "peari white."

bismuthons nitrate.

Chem.: $\mathrm{Bi}^{\prime \prime \prime}\left(\mathrm{NO}_{3}\right)_{3} .5 \mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{O}$. It is obtained by dissolving the metal in aitric acid. It crystal lises in large transparent prisms. By pouring a solution of this salt into a iarge quasitity of water s white basic nitrate is precipitated This is used in medicioe under the name of Bismuthi subnitras; it acts as a direct zedaBismuthi subnitras; it acts as a direct seda-

It was formerly abundant over Mid and Eastern Europe, and ta the largest living European quadruped, standing some six feet high at the shonlder, and neasuring sbout ten feet from the muzzle to the root of the tail, which is nearly three feet more, and the strength is proportional to the size. The general colour is dusky brown there is a thick mane, and the hair on the forehead is long and wavy. The cows are smaller than the bulls, and the mane is thinmer. The Europesn Bison is now re stricted to some part of the Caucasus, and to lithuania, where it is atrictly protected by the Czar of Russia. Some specinuens have been exhibited in the gardens of the Zoological Society.
5. Bison Americanus or Bonasus Americanus, the Amerjcan Bison, popularly but errencously called the Buffalo. It hsa fifteen ribs on each side, whilst the Enropean bison has but tonrteen, and the domestic ox thirteea. They once roamed in herds in the western part of British America and in the United States. They are large and powerful anlmals, with great humped shoniders and a shaggy msue. Their horns are short and taper rspidly. They can resist a moderate number of wolves, but fall a prey to the grizzly bear. They have been so relentlessly pursued by reckless hunters that they are alnost exterminsted, though they formerly existed io vast multitudes. At present there are only one or two small herds left, hut an effort is being made to preserve and increase them in Yellowstone National Park.

phauts of Apia "Macaulay: Hirt. Eng., ch. $\mathbf{x}$ iv.
B. Intransitive: Only in the expression to blame $=$ to be blamed.

- Johnson hesitated whether to call blame in such a plirase as "you are to blame," an inlinitive of a verb or a noun with such a construction as in the French is tort $=$ by wrong, wrangfully. He inclines to consider it the latter one; with more reason Professor Bain and others regard it as the former.
a He could not hut feel that, though others unght Jfremelay: Hist. Eng., ch. x riii.
- Crabb thus distinguishes between the verbs to blame, to reprove, to reproach, to upbraid, to censure, and to condemn:-"The expression of oue's disapprobation of a person, or of that whiteh he has done, is the common ides in the signification of these terms: but ides in the signifeation of these terlus: but to blame expresses less than to reprove. We simply charge with a fault in blaming; but in reproving severity is mixed with the charge. Reprocch expresses more than either; it is to blame acrimoniously.

To blame and reprove are the acts of a superior; to reproach, nopbraid, that of an equal : to censure and condemn leave the relative condition of the agent and the sufferer undefined. Masters blame or reprove their servants; parents, their children; frienda and acquaintances reproach and upbraid each other; persons of all conditions may censure or be censured, condemn or be condemned, aecording to circumstances.
Dlame and reproof are dealt out on every ordinary occasion; reproach and upbraid respect personal natters, and always that which affecta the morsl character: censtre and condemnation are provoked hy fanlta and misconduct of dif. ferent descriptions." Blame, reproach, upbraid, and condemn may be applied to oureelver: reproof and censure are applied to others: wo blame ourselves for acts of fupprudence; our consciences reproach us for our weaknesses, (Crabb: Eng. Synon.

- 2. Precise signification:

Crabb thus distinguishes between blameless, irreproochable, unblemished, unspotted, or spolless:-" Blameless is less than irreproach able; what is blampless is simply free from blame, hut that which is irreproachable cannot le blamed, or have any reproach attached to it. It ia good to say of a man that he leads s blameless llfe, but it is a high enconium to say, that he leads an irreproachable life: the say, that he leads an irreproachable of one who ia known only for his harmilessnces ; the latter is known only for his harmlessnces; the latter well known for his integrity io the different selations of sociaty. Unblemished and un spotted are applicable to many objacts, besidea that of personal conduct ; and when appliad to this, thair original meaniag snfficiently points out their use in distinction from the has an irreproachable or an unblemished repu has an irreproachable or an unblemished repu(Crabb: Eng. longing to the order Polypodiaces. The sterile fronds are pectinato-pinnatifid and horizontal ; the fertile ones pinnated and erect with numerous segments. Both are smooth. The pinnae are llnear, bluntish, entire, nearly equal at bese. Along the back of the fronds in theas ferms the spore-cases are arranged in a long, narrow, continuons line on each side of the mid-rib. This line has a covering in its early stages, but it soon splits down the side next the mid-rib, and the spore-cases appear to cover the whole under-surface of the fronds. The sori at first are distant from the margin, while in the very closely allled genus Lomaria they are truly marginal. The Hard-fern most resembles the Bracken in the fruiting. It will readily grow on rockwork in the open air. Cool, shady places suit it best.

II. Theology:

IT Undcr the Jewish ceremonial law it was enjoined that no animal ahould be vowed and offered in sacrifice unless it were without oflered in sacrince untess Lev. xxii. 20, 21 . See also Exod. blemish, Lev. xxii. 20, 21. See also Exod. xii 5 ; Lev. i. 3; xiv. 10 ; Numb exix. 8, blemishes in an animal may be learned from Lev. xxil. 21-25. The general opinion of theologians is that this alsence of blemish was designed to typify the spotless character of Christ.
"I. . he ahall take two he lambly without blemikn, Let. xiv. 10
"Bot with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb Without blemizh and without spot. -1 Pet. Lis f (1) Crabb thus distinguishes between blemish, stain, spot, speck, and flaw:-"In the proper gense blemioh ia the generic, the rest speeific; s stain, s spot, spech, and flaw are blemishes, but there are likewise many blemishes which are neither stains, spots, specks nor faws. Whatever takes off from the seemliness of appearance is a blemish. In works of art the slightest dimness of colour or want of proportion is s blemish. A stain and spot suffieiently characterise themselves, as that which is surerfiuous snd out of place. A Which is supernuous snd out of place. A speck is s small spot; and a flaw, which is conspeck is 8 sman spot; and a fuw, which is confaulty indenture on the outer surface. A blemish tarnishes; a stain spoils; s spot, speck, or flaw disfigures. A blemish is rectitied, a stain wiped out, s spot or speck removed. Plemish, stain, and spot are employed figuratively. Even an imputation of what is improper in our moral conduct is a blemish in our reputation; the failings of a good man are so many spots in the bright hemisphere of his virtue; there are some vices which affix a stain on the character of nations, as well as of the individuals who are guilty of them. A hemish or a spot may be removed by a course of good conduct, bat i stain is mostly indelible it is as great a privilege to havc an unblemished reputation, or a spotless character, as it is a misfortung to have the stain of bad actions affixed to our name,
(2) Blemish, defect, and fautt are thus distin-guished:-" Blemish respects the exterior of an object ; defect consists in the want of some specifie propriety in an olject; fault conveys the idea not only of something wrong. but also of its relstion to the suthor. There is a blemish in fine china; $s$ defect in the springs of a clock; and a foutt in the contrivauce. An accident may cause s blemish in a fine painting; the course of nature may occasion a defect in a person's speech; but the carelessness of the workman is evinced hy the faults in the workmanship. A blemish may lo casier remedied than a defect is corrected or a funlt repaired." (Crabb: Eng. Synon.)

"The blind receive their aight . . ."-Mate. xi. 6 .
If For the canses which produce blindness see Blininess. The number of blind average about 1 to 1,010 of the population, so that there are approximately 70,000 blind persona in the Uoited States. The deprivation of aight in an individual makes him attend to his other sedses which by continued exerciae become more acute. The intellectual development of the blind is not prevented by their infirmity nearly o mucb as it is in the case of the deaf, sDi tha list of blind men who have diatinguished themselves is s long one. When iuodern Christian philanthropy began to tarn special attention to the blind, it was thought enough to furnish them here sod there with an "asylum" [Blind Asvium] ; the extent to which they could be educated by proper mesns was not as yet understood. The able Valen ine Halny will for ever be gratefully remem bered by the blind, he having established the first school for their education in Psris in 1784. Two yesrs later he had books for their benefit printed in raised or embossed cha racters. In his footateps have followed Dir. Jas, Gnill of Edinburgb, Mr. Johe Alstone of Glasgow, Dr. How of America, Mr. Lucas of Bristol, Mr. Frere of London, Mr. Moon of Brighton, Mr. Wait of New York, and others. about 1848 the whole Bible was printed nt Glasgow in raised Roman chnracters, and in $1855-6$ the Rev. ## block-printing, $s$.

Printing: The art or process of printing fron hloeks instead of from movable types. It is supposed to have been invented by the Chinese about A.D. 593. It has been loug employed in calloo-printing in that country, as well as in India. Arabia, and Egypt. In Europe the same prucess was adopted for printing playing-cards, and during the first half of the #fteenth centnry books were prir-duced by means of hloek-printing; they were duced by means of hloek-printing ; they were hence ealled hlock-books. [BLock - sook.]
Now block-printing is used for printing cotton cloth or praprinting is used or Two stares of progress in the method are to be traced. First the pattern was dabbed upon the colour and impressed by hand upon the material, which lay upon a table before the workmin. When the pattern wos in several colours. different blocks of the same aize were employed, the raised pattern in each being adapted for its special portion of the design. The exact correspondence of each part, as to poaitioa, was seeured hy pins on the hlocks, which pierced amall holes in the material and indicated the exact position. Noxt, an Improved oystem by Perrot was introduced, in which the calleo passed between a square priam snd three eapassed between a square priam sind three engraved blacka, bronght in appeeition to three impresslona therapon in snceession. Each block was inked after each impression, and the cloth was drawn through by a winding cylinder. The blocka were pressed against the cloth by springs. Perrot's syatem did twonty times as mnch work in an heur as that which lt all but diapleced. Now block-printing has been superseded by cylinder or rollerprinting, which works tweaty times as fast as erea Parrot'e method. (Knight.)

II. International Maritime Law: A3 a block ade seriously interferes with the ordinary commercial right of trading with every place international law carefully limits its operation the principle adopted being this: that belli gerents are not eutitled to do anything likely to incommode neutrals more than it benefit themselves. Noutrals are therefore entitled to disregard a hlockade except it be pffective, that is, unless the town be invested by a fleet sufficient to prevent the ingress and the exit of vessels. When on the 21 st November, 2806 the Berlin decree of Napoleon I. declared the whole British lslands in a state of blockade that blockade, being ludicronsly ineffectiye, was illegal; ao also, though to a zomewha less cxtent, were the British ordera in Counci of the 11th and 21st November, 180 A , which placed France and all its tributary states in a atate of bluckade. The retaliatory Napoleonic Milan deeree of 27 th December, 1807, extend ing the previously announced blockade to the British dominions in all quarters, laboured to still greater cxtent under the aame defect More effective, as being more limited in area were the blockadea of the Elbe by Britain in 1803 , that of the Baltic by Denmark in IS48-9 and 1864 and that of the ports of the 1s48-9 and st, Confederate be fornally notified before it is enforced, perbe fornally notified before it is enforced, permission being granted to neutral vessels then to depart, carrying with them any cargo which they may already have on board; when it terminates, its cessation ahould also be formally daclared. Any one running a blockade does so at hia own peril; one's own government cannot by international law protect him from forfeiting hia vessel with its cargo and his liberty, if he be captured by the blockading fleet.

There are various forms of blowpipe, ae Gahn's, Wollaston's, and Dr. Black'g. To use the blowbipe it is necessary to ac quire the art of keeping the lusigs aupntied quire tha airough the nostrile whilst aecurin with air thro atead. the cominnication we the mouti, month and the lungs being closed by a peculia action of the tongue, which is drawn beck against the orifice. The amall body to be gubjected to examination may be held in amall forcepa, or if easily fusible, in a amal silver or platioum ajoon, but the ordinary reat, the one used to aupport metallic oxides and many other minerals, is of well-hurnt wood charcoal, in which a small cavity has been made with a knife. The body to be examined ahould not be larger than a peppercorn.

II In chemical analysis the blowpipe is used to examine colid aubstances.
(a) Hested on charcoal, oxides of lead, copper, and silver, de. yield metallic beads in the reducing-flame, especially when mixed with carbonate of aodium or cyanide of potasaium.
(b) The blowpipe is used to make boraxbeada (q.v.).
(c) Under its operation some aubatances are found to be fusible and others voistile; in the latter category are ranked mercury, arsenic, and ammonium compounds.
(d) Salts of zinc give a green colour when heated on charcoal with $\mathrm{Co}\left(\mathrm{NO}_{3}\right)_{2}$ cobalt nttrate; aluminum salts, phosphates or vilicates a blue colour, aalts of magoesia a pink colour.
(e) Chrominta salts fused with potassiun nitrate, on platinum foil, give a ycilow mase of potassium cliromate; inanganese salts, o green mass of potasaium manganate.
( $f$ ) Salta of certain metals give characteriatic colours when moistened with hydrochioric acid and heated in the blowpipe flame. Thus sodium salts give yellow, potassium salts violet, atrontlum and lithinm salta crimson, calcium aalts orange-red, barium aalts yellowcalcium aalts orange-red, thallium salts grecn, and copper salt green, thallium salt
